

5. Acknowledgement

First of all, I would like to thank my most significant academic teachers, Professor Helmut Schatz at the Department of Internal Medicine at the University Bochum and Professor Andreas Pfeiffer at the Department of Endocrinology, Charité-University Medicine Berlin, Campus Benjamin Franklin and at the Department Clinical Nutrition, German Institute of Nutrition, Potsdam.

Especially Professor Pfeiffer joined most parts of my scientific way. His excellent scientific expertise, in combination with his friendly, helpful and tolerant character make him an outstanding academic teacher. Most importantly, I thank him for giving me the scientific freedom, which is always required for successful work and for supporting my ideas, even if the outcome was quite often not directly evident.

I would like to thank those persons, who contributed significantly to my work of the last years, Matthias Möhlig, Katrin Sprengel, Uta Wegewitz, Helmut Rochlitz, Thomas Bobbert, Isabel Göring, Johannes Bühnen, André Kutz, Sheila Müller, Anke Aßmann, Katja Höhne, Andrea Stempel, Knut Mai, Madlen Freudenberg, Manja Reimann, Martin Osterhoff, Michael Ristow, Hans-Peter Hammes, Heiner Boeing, Anja Kroke, Kurt Hoffmann, Rolf Meyer-Schwickerath, Vincent Christofalo, Michael Boulton, Doris Pfeiffer, Christof Schöfl, Matthias Tschöp, Bärbel Otto, Carsten Otto, Guntram Schernthaner, Thomas Griga, Hanno Heimann and Oliver Fiehn.

My parents taught (and continuously teach...) me the basic principles of life. I thank for their generous and continuous support and for exemplifying that a prosperous life basically depends on consideration of ethical values, rather than material success.

Sabine, Leonard and Sophie, I thank you for enriching my life with warmth, security, confidence and love. I thank for every day, we have together!
