

Acknowledgements

I would like to thank Prof. Dr. Volker Haak for his support and interest, refining my senses for the understanding and not understanding of physical phenomena. Many thanks also to Prof. Dr. Hans-Jürgen Götze for acting as second referee.

I am highly indebted to Dr. Heinrich Brasse who brought me to Berlin. His steady, active support and competent guidance were always helpful and fundamental for the success of this work. The proof-reading of the manuscript was a great relief.

Dr. Volker Rath gave me helpful advice in crucial phases of the work, having the right idea in mind or publication at hand to get a step further. It was him, who mostly encouraged me to publish. Through short but effective guidance at the very beginning of this study, Dr. Markus Eisel introduced me to the latest developments in array data processing and the physical model behind them.

Sincere thanks to the authors of the processing and modelling codes, permitting me their usage and (partly) extension: Gary Egbert, Weerachai Siripunvaraporn, Josef Pek, Tomáš Verner, Phil Wannamaker, and others.

Due to the talent of Dr. Katrin Schwalenberg to organize work and leisure time, the first field campaign in 1998/99 in the Andes was a full success in every respect. Many thanks also to the other co-workers of this campaign, Pamela Lezaeta, Pablo Salazar and Faustino Ticona, who was clearly the best Spanish-teacher I could ever get! Thanks also to the teams who collected the data from the previous campaigns.

My deep thanks to Arne Hoffmann-Rothe for impressively demonstrating me how comfortable long period variation measurement campaigns can be compared to those of short periods. His short support at the beginning of our experiment in South Chile was most effective. Without the comprehensive aid of Anne Cyganiak, Marco Heigel and David Martens the measurements in South Chile could not have been carried out with the success, they finally turned out to have. Mauricio Zuleta's delicacy in contact with the native Mapuche people was very helpful to open doors. The hospitable exile-Swabian Helmut kindly allowed us to deploy our reference station on his property. The imperturbability of our local contact persons Hans Wilke and Klaus Bataille helped to cope with unpleasant situations with authorities. Thanks also to Marisol Bataille and Rasha Docmac, our 'angel from Loncoche'.

A final thanks for the unlimited support and love from my parents!

