Le Président. - Nous en venons à l'important sujet qui nous occupe d'aujourd'hui.
Ce matin, certains parlementaires nationaux s'interrogeaient sur l'opportunité de faire précéder nos débats d'une introduction. Comme le temps nous est compté, je ne veux pas empiéter sur vos délibérations. En préalable à ces débats, il convient simplement de rappeler que l'Union est un acteur très important sur la scène internationale, même si, parfois, son action paraît modeste quand on la mesure à certains résultats en tant qu'acteur. Son poids économique, les moyens financiers qu'elle consacre à l'aide au développement dans le monde, qui est la contribution la plus importante actuelle sur le plan international, les liens historiques et les positions géographiques de ses États membres font en sorte que les citoyens européens attendent beaucoup du rôle que doit jouer l'Union européenne dans le monde. Cette attente est partagée par nombre de nos partenaires internationaux. Ainsi dans nos débats, à l'instar du questionnement qui vous a été adressé, la question ne sera pas de savoir si l'Union a un rôle à jouer. En effet, nous savons tous qu'elle a un rôle à jouer. Nous devrons définir comment elle peut le faire le mieux possible.
Dans vos dossiers, vous trouverez le document 161, qui décrit la situation actuelle en matière de commerce international et d'aide au développement, les aspects internationaux des politiques internes de l'Union, la politique étrangère et de sécurité commune, la politique de sécurité et de défense et, enfin, la difficile question de la représentation de l'Union dans les enceintes internationales. Tels sont les points que nous aimerions voir traités par nos orateurs. À cet effet, nous avons préparé un groupe de questions qui figurent à la fin de ce document.

Nous pouvons donc commencer notre réunion. Le premier orateur inscrit est Mme Ana Palacio à qui je donne la parole. <BRK>

Palacio Vallelersundi (Ch.E/G.-ES). - Señor Presidente, he querido que mi primera intervención, después de mi nombramiento como ministra de Asuntos Exteriores del Reino de España, fuera en mi calidad de miembro de esta Convención y en este hemiciclo.

(Aplausos)

Usted ha destacado, señor Presidente, que mi nombramiento es un espaldarazo a esta Convención. Es la prueba de la importancia que le presta el Presidente Aznar. Pero hay más: nombrar ministro de Asuntos Exteriores a alguien cuya experiencia política se ha desarrollado en este Parlamento, en el seno de un partido europeo, de uno de los grandes partidos que han hecho Europa, creo que es un reconocimiento simbólico de primera magnitud de la realidad de Europa, del calado de Europa, de la presencia de Europa. Y más aún: creo también que es una prueba de que el lema de la Presidencia española "más Europa" refleja un convencimiento profundo.

Señor Presidente, España quiere más Europa en política exterior, de seguridad y de defensa, y la pregunta es: ¿cómo lograr este objetivo? España siempre ha unido a su europeísmo un marcado carácter pragmático. Y en el ámbito de la PESC, este pragmatismo es aún más necesario, ya que el verdadero desafío es forjar una auténtica voluntad política común. Es correcto así el planteamiento de extender progresivamente el método comunitario a la PESC. Debe reforzarse el papel de la Comisión convirtiéndola en el centro de gravedad de la iniciativa política en esta área.

024 Pues bien, señor Presidente, en mi opinión el método clásico comunitario ha
 025 funcionado maravillosamente cuando se trata de regular y de legislar, y España, allí donde deba aplicarse, lo defenderá con todas sus consecuencias. Sin embargo, hay que tener en cuenta que la PESC no tiene un carácter legislativo, sino eminentemente ejecutivo.

026 Además, señor Presidente, quiero dejar constancia de que la aceleración del proceso 027 de mundialización acrecienta la interdependencia de las distintas políticas tanto en el 028 ámbito económico como en el ámbito político. El 11 de septiembre reveló de forma
 029 trágica que la seguridad interior tiene un carácter transnacional y que los Estados no
 030 pueden ya abordar unilateralmente problemas como el terrorismo. Una visión
 031 restrictiva de la política exterior, de seguridad y de defensa no permite responder 032 adecuadamente a las expectativas de los ciudadanos europeos, para quienes no es
 033 comprensible que la respuesta global de la Unión Europea contra el terrorismo y 034 otras amenazas similares no pueda incluir la dimensión militar.

035 Por lo tanto, señor Presidente, uno de los grandes retos de esta Convención es 036 encontrar un sistema pragmático para responder a esta demanda de los ciudadanos.

044 Brok (PE). - Herr Präsident! Die Bevölkerung will eine gemeinsame europäische Außen-, Sicherheits- und Verteidigungspolitik, wie wir das aus Umfragen wissen.
 Sie hat erkannt, dass der Nationalstaat diese Probleme nicht mehr alleine bewältigen kann, sie hat sogar erkannt, dass die bisherige Politik zur Marginalisierung Europas führt und dass nur gemeinsame Anstrengungen es gestatten, dass wir in dieser Welt noch eine Rolle spielen.

Der Mehrwert lässt sich nicht durch die alte Allianzmethode gewinnen, sondern nur durch die Gemeinschaftsmethode.

Es kann nur einen Weg geben, dass wir eine einzige Administration haben, dass all die Instrumente in einer Hand sind. Es kann nur so gehen, dass ein Mehrwert gewonnen wird, indem man eine einzige Analyse hat. Statt 15 nationale Analysen zusammenzuschreiben, brauchen wir eine Analyse aus gemeinschaftlicher Sicht.
 Es kann nur so gehen, dass man in der Handelspolitik alles zusammenfasst, nicht nur den Bereich des klassischen Warenverkehrs, sondern auch beispielsweise den der Dienstleistungen, die bisher nicht in europäische Zuständigkeit fallen.

Ich meine, dass aus diesem Grunde die Synergien auch nur gewonnen werden können, wenn wir dies alles auch in einer Arbeitsgruppe behandeln und nicht in zwei Arbeitsgruppen.

Aus diesen Folgerungen heraus ist es wichtig, dass die Positionen von Solana und Patten zusammengefasst werden müssen.

Da sind zwei hervorragende Persönlichkeiten tätig, aber wenn wir zwei Bürokratien aufbauen, bekämpfen sich diese Bürokratien nach aller Erfahrung mehr, als dass sie zu gemeinschaftlichen Zwecken zusammenführen.

Deswegen ist es notwendig, dass wir die Aufgabe eines Hohen Beauftragten für Außenpolitik verschmelzen mit der eines Außenkommissars in der Kommission, der eine besondere Legitimationsbindung zum Rat hat, weil natürlich die Außen- und Sicherheitspolitik nicht zu 100% allein mit der Gemeinschaftsmethode bewältigt werden kann. Dieser kann eine gemeinsame Analyse und gemeinsame Vorschläge unterbreiten.

Aber das ist genau der Unterschied zur Gemeinschaftsmethode: Es geht nicht um ein Initiativmonopol auf Seiten der Kommission, sondern es müssen auch Initiativen von Seiten der Mitgliedstaaten möglich sein.

Ich glaube, nur wenn auch diese Möglichkeit einer wirklichen parlamentarischen
 Kontrolle gegeben ist, kann mit einem Haushalt gefahren werden und können Verantwortlichkeiten klar geregelt werden. Das ist übrigens eine Regelung, die auch mit einem Superpräsidenten nicht geschaffen werden kann. Wenn ein Superpräsident auf Seiten des Rates geschaffen wird, der exekutive Aufgaben erfüllen soll, wenn er im Bereich der Außen- und Sicherheitspolitik die alleinige Zuständigkeit erhält, wenn er Haushaltstätigkeiten bekommt, dann kann es keine parlamentarische Kontrolle mehr geben, weder durch die nationalen Parlamente noch durch das Europäische Parlament. Dies kann auf Dauer nicht funktionieren! Ich glaube, ein entscheidender Punkt ist, dass wir Verantwortlichkeiten und Transparenz schaffen, und nicht neue Nebenhaushalte. Deswegen ist die Anbindung an die Kommission von ungeheuer großer Bedeutung.

047

Letztlich geht es bei dieser Entscheidung, ob wir einen Superpräsidenten im Rat schaffen oder eine Lösung finden, die im Zusammenhang mit der Kommission steht, darum, ob Jean Monnet oder Metternich gewinnt. Ich glaube aber, dass Metternich daran gescheitert ist, weil er keine Legitimation hatte. Deswegen zeigt die Geschichte, dass dies der falsche Weg ist!

048

052

Ich meine, dass wir den Rat natürlich mit einer starken Rolle versehen müssen. Es müssen Entscheidungen gefasst werden, die Mehrheitsentscheidung muss möglich werden. Aber im Bereich der Verteidigungspolitik werden natürlich Mehrheitsentscheidungen nicht notwendig sein. Aus diesem Grunde müssen wir dort Möglichkeiten schaffen, die eine coalition of the willing ermöglichen, das heißt, wenn es einen Weg gibt, wo verstärkte Zusammenarbeit sinnvoll ist, dann im Bereich der Sicherheits- und Verteidigungspolitik, um eben diese coalition of the willing zu ermöglichen.

053

Die Synergien zeigen uns auch, dass dies im Bereich der Rüstungspolitik, der Forschung der Rüstungspolitik vorangebracht werden muss. Wir geben 60% des Betrags aus, den die Amerikaner für Verteidigungspolitik aufwenden, erzielen aber nur 10% des operationellen Ergebnisses. Die knappen Haushalte unserer Mitgliedstaaten zeigen, dass gemeinschaftliche Lösungen uns die Chance geben, nicht marginalisiert zu werden!

Aber wir sollten uns keine Illusionen machen: die Aufgabe, vor der wir stehen, ist schwer und zwingt uns auch, als Union, die alten Gewohnheiten und Modelle zu ändern. Die Sichtbarkeit und die Wirksamkeit der Union zu ändern, ist nicht lediglich eine technische Frage oder eine Sache, die sich durch eine einfache Änderung einiger Paragraphen der Verträge ereignen wird. Es stimmt, dass die Instrumente und Mittel, die die Union zu Verfügung hat, können und sollten verbessert und entwickelt werden. Aber diese Bemühungen werden nicht viel bewirken, falls das Wesentliche fehlt, nämlich die Erhaltung eines starken gemeinsamen politischen Willens, das Erreichen der geteilten Ziele betrifft. Dieser gemeinsame politische Wille, der sich im Laufe der jüngsten Geschichte des europäischen Kontinents aufgebaut und gesetzt hat, entsteht und wird weiter entstehen, durch mehrere und unterschiedliche geschichtliche Wirklichkeiten jedes Mitgliedsstaats, einschließlich dessen, was die Beziehungen/Verhältnisse mit dem außereuropäischen Raum, nämlich in Africa und Lateinamerica, betrifft.

Diese repräsentieren einen Mehrwert, sollten nicht als Hindernisse oder Abhaltungen gesehen werden. Die externe Handlung der Union wird sich also weiter entwickeln müssen, so wie der globale Prozess des europäischen Aufbaus, in einer weiterentwickelnden und abgestuften Weise. Große Sprünge nach vorne sind durchaus theoretisch möglich, aber solten diesen Weg wählen, laufen wir ernste Gefahr, Frakturen zu verursachen, die sich im Endeffekt in einen gefährlichen Rückschritt umschlagen könnten.

Timmermans (Parl.-NL). - Mijnheer de voorzitter, in de afgelopen twaalf jaar is de onmacht van Europa om zijn rol op het internationale vlak te spelen voor de Europeanen, vaak een bron van frustratie en soms ook van schaamte. Daarom vragen de Europeanen van ons dat wij met voorstellen komen om die positie te versterken. Idealiter zou het zo zijn dat we, als we in deze conventie toch toewerken naar het opruimen van de pijlerstructuren, dan ook het buitenlands beleid geheel onderbrengen in wat tot nu toe de eerste pijler heet en dus helemaal communautariseren.

Ik weet ook dat dat een onmogelijke opgave zal zijn omdat bepaalde onderwerpen altijd voor een voorzienbare periode tot het domein van de lidstaten zullen behoren. Denk bijvoorbeeld maar aan het uitzenden van troepen: dat zal nooit een onderwerp zijn waarover door het Europees Parlement wordt besloten, dat zullen de nationale parlementen zelf willen blijven doen. Dus dat is voor een deel onmogelijk.

Maar ik vind wel dat we moeten uitgaan van de opzet in het buitenlands beleid - dat hoort ook bij de aard van het buitenlands beleid - dat dat op het hoogst mogelijk niveau wordt geformuleerd: als het ware omgekeerde subsidiariteit. We spreken af dat iets op het communautaire niveau wordt aangepakt, dat op het communautaire niveau initiatieven worden genomen, tenzij blijkt dat dat onmogelijk is. Pas dan als teruggangspositie gaan we dingen intergouvernementeel aanpakken.

De eerste taak moet zijn om weer veilig te stellen dat datgene wat in de verdragen al communautair is geregeld, weer communautair wordt, want in de afgelopen jaren is de communautaire taak in het internationaal beleid geërodeerd, steeds meer naar de Raad gegaan ten koste van de Commissie. Dat is slecht. Kijk maar naar de handelspolitiek. Dus dat is onze eerst opgave. En vervolgens moeten we onderzoeken welke gebieden geschikt zijn om gecommunautariseerd te worden en alleen als dat niet lukt weer op een intergouvernementele aanpak overstappen.

Vertegenwoordiger, die zitting moet hebben in de Commissie, en de commissaris extern beleid: maximalisering van de meerderheidsbesluitvorming, inclusief altijd co-decisie door het Europees Parlement; rechtspersoonlijkheid van de Europese Unie, een zeer belangrijk punt; Unievertegenwoordiging in internationale organisaties, hetgeen wellicht dichterbij kan worden gebracht indien door wijziging van het systeem van voorzitterschappen daar een meer evenwichtige positie tussen lidstaten kan worden gekozen.

Maar op dit laatste punt wil ik één heel duidelijke waarschuwing laten horen. Ik heb namelijk de indruk dat de Raad en de Europese Raad ondertussen bezig zijn de eigen zaakjes alvast te regelen, ten nadele van de rol van deze conventie. Het mag niet zo zijn dat in de Raad en in de Europese Raad al conclusies worden getrokken over het functioneren van die instellingen waardoor aan deze conventie de mogelijkheid wordt ontnomen om daarvoor voorstellen te formuleren en om het buitenlands beleid meer te communautariseren dan momenteel het geval is. <BRK>

Timmermans (Parl.-NL). - Sir the chairman, during the past twelve years, the inability of Europe to use its power to play a key role on the international level for the European people has often been a source of frustration and sometimes also of shame.

Therefore the European people ask us to make proposals to strengthen that position.

Ideally, if we in this convention really work at eliminating the pillar structure, then we should also house the entire foreign administration department in what until now is called the first pillar and thus communarize completely.

I also know that it will be an impossible assignment because particular policies will always belong for a foreseeable period in the domain of the member countries. The dispatching of troops for instance: this will never be a policy area on which the European Parliament can decide, the national parliaments will want to continue doing this. Thus this is partly impossible.

But I do find that in foreign administration, we must at least start with the intention - which is part of the nature of foreign administration - and that this is formulated at the highest possible level: as if it were subsidiarity reversed. We agree that things should be handled on a community level; that initiatives should be taken at a community level, except when that turns out to be impossible. Only then as fallback position, we should handle things at an intergovernmental level.

The first task must be to ensure again that what has been regulated on a community level in the treaties, becomes community again, for in the past years the community's role has eroded in the area of international administration; more and more has gone to the Council at the expense of the Commission.

That is bad.

Just look at the area of trade policy. Thus that is our first task. And then we must examine which areas are suitable for bringing to a community level and only when this doesn't work we should revert again to an intergovernmental approach.

Consequently we need; the Commission to play a larger role; the unification of personnel of the High Representative, who should be a part of the Commission, with the commissioners' external administration, maximal use of qualified majority voting, giving European Parliament a bigger say via the co-decision procedure; a legal personality for the European Union. A very important issue is the Union's representation at an international level, which could possibly be facilitated by changing the current system of presidencies into a more balanced position between 092 But on this last point I want to give a very clear warning. I have the impression, 093 actually that the Council and the European Council are busy trying to solves these 094 problems in their own way, at the expense of the role of this convention. The Council 095 and the European Council should not yet draw conclusions about the functioning of

101 Puwak (Romanian Government). - Mr President, allow me to add a word of 102 welcome to our young colleagues here and to wish them success in their work for our 103 common future.

104 I want to refer to two interlinked aspects concerning the form and the substance of 105 EU external action.

106 The first concerns expectations about the CFSP. All of us and our citizens want it to 107 have a higher profile and greater credibility. Europe has to speak with a single voice 108 on the international stage.

109 Let us give the Union a political identity equal to its economic force. Let us not 110 forget the social implications. We should not delude ourselves into thinking that the 111 Union can prosper without facing the political challenges of globalisation.

112 The EU has to assume global responsibilities. EU action in relation to the CFSP 113 should strengthen international stability, conflict prevention, the fight against international terrorists, extremists, poverty, and the promotion of democracy and human rights.

113 The second element I find very important is that a coherent and prompt response to international events by the EU requires positive political action based on a common political will of the Member States.

114 In the meantime, we must remedy the anomaly that one EU body has the competence in this area and the power to decide, while another has the means and the instruments to implement decisions.

115 My third point is that the EU should aim to be the best example of institutionalised multilateral cooperation, with national sovereignty transferred for a common purpose.

116 Citizens expect a CFSP which is not narrowly interest-based but reflects solidarity, tolerance, engagement, commitment and inclusiveness.

117 The second aspect I want to mention is institutional change. Increased efficiency and coherence of EU external action may also require greater fusion of the responsibilities of the High Representative for the CFSP and the Commissioner for External Relations.

118 This is a solution that can and should be considered.

119 How the High Representative fits into the new framework needs to be clarified.

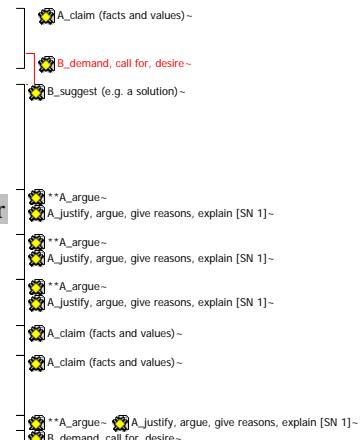

120 Qualified majority voting must be extended to increase the efficiency and consistency of EU external action. <BRK>

121 Barnier (CE). - Monsieur le Président, quand on parle, comme c'est le cas aujourd'hui, des relations extérieures de l'Union, on est frappé par deux paradoxes.
 Le premier paradoxe est celui qui existe entre les souhaits des citoyens qui s'expriment via l'Eurobaromètre ou via les jeunes citoyens européens membres de la Convention, et les actes que posent dans certains cas les gouvernements ou les institutions européennes. Le second paradoxe est celui qui existe entre le foisonnement d'instruments juridiques permettant à la Communauté européenne d'exister en droit international - plus de 800 accords internationaux, bilatéraux, 200 accords multilatéraux - et la difficulté de l'Union à faire entendre sa voix ou à peser de son vrai poids lorsqu'un conflit ou une crise la concerne.

122 Pourtant, comme vous l'avez vous-même dit, Monsieur le Président Giscard

Nous avons, Monsieur le Président, chers collègues et amis, quelques mois encore pour chercher, comme l'a dit Ana Palacio, sans idéologie et sans préjugés, les moyens de faire entendre cette voix de l'Europe. <BRK>

McDonagh (Ch.E/G.-IE). - The starting point for our discussions today is that the citizens of Europe, including the young citizens of Europe represented here this afternoon, want the European Union to live up to its responsibilities on the global stage. Any analysis of where we are and where we want to go should begin with the reaffirmation of the objectives, values and interests that our citizens share, while recognising also that there is a genuine diversity of views within and across our countries about some of the implications of those objectives, values and interests. The ideals on which the EU was founded are the very ideals that can and should inspire its international role: conflict prevention, justice and the rule of law, the primacy of human rights and democracy, the peaceful settlement of disputes, conflict resolution through negotiation, not war, and collective security.

In the era of advanced globalisation and interdependence that we live in, responsible global citizenship is not only right but necessary. The centrality of the UN Charter and the commitment to multilateral management of our common destiny on this planet is a core value.

The Union is uniquely placed, as a community of values and common interests and as a prototype of advanced regional cooperation, to play a key international role for peace, stability and prosperity. We have a unique range of instruments at our disposal from trade and aid, to political and diplomatic relations across the globe, through to our early warning, conflict prevention and crisis management tools. There are our strengths. We should play to them.

I share the view of many that our debate should not be framed around the idea of the Union becoming some kind of global 'superstate', competing with the United States for world domination. A coherent, strategic approach drawing on the appropriate mix of instruments in response to or in anticipation of events is the way forward. It is difficult to foresee agreement to any proposals to collapse the Second Pillar into the First Pillar or to move away from a CFSP which is essentially intergovernmental. Foreign policy remains closely identified with national sovereignty for all Member States, large and small, in military alliances or otherwise.

There is, however, widespread agreement that the coherence of the CFSP and other aspects of external action can be improved.

Mr Solana, as High Representative, has proven the value of his office. He and Mr Patten, working together, have shown what can be achieved when these resources are harnessed together and work in tandem. The Council secretariat and the Commission could be more clearly mandated to provide the Council with single, unified recommendations both at the strategic level in terms of identifying and prioritising common interests, and at the more specific policy level in anticipation of, or in response to events.

It is clear that the common foreign and security policy and the Council secretariat need significant additional resources, both human and financial, to equip them for their expanded role, particularly for early warning, conflict prevention and crisis management. These issues can and should be addressed in the short term.

In discussions about further development of the EU's international role we tend to concentrate on what may not be working at the expense of what is. We should try to avoid reinventing the wheel. Many of the ideas such as generalised QMV in this area or communiarisation of the CFSP have been discussed and rejected in the past, for good reason.

External action is a hugely important area for the Convention and for Europe. We need to move forward in a practical, strategic way, building on two important things: first, on our strengths, which include diversity; second, on our shared values. <BRK>

Tajani (PE). - Signor Presidente, qualche tempo fa un politico europeo definì il nostro continente un gigante economico, un nano politico ed un verme militare. Questo non può più essere, anche pensando ai giovani che partecipano ai lavori della Convenzione. Dobbiamo invece diventare protagonisti della fase che si è aperta dopo le tragiche vicende dell'11 settembre contribuendo attivamente al mantenimento della pace nel mondo.

L'Unione dovrà, inoltre, essere dotata di una reale capacità operativa militare in coordinamento con la NATO, e per questo, di fronte al parziale fallimento dell'UEO, occorrerà istituire un corpo militare europeo per il peace keeping e il peace enforcing.

Attenzione, però: con queste considerazioni non voglio assolutamente mettere in discussione il ruolo e la sovranità degli Stati nazionali! Sarebbe, questo, un grave errore strategico che ci priverebbe delle consolidate capacità di azione esterna e di difesa dei paesi dell'Unione. Si tratta, invece, di migliorare l'efficienza dell'azione comunitaria nei settori in cui è evidente l'inadeguatezza dei singoli Stati. La lotta al terrorismo, alla criminalità e al traffico di droga, il controllo dei flussi migratori chiedono la condivisione di oneri finanziari, di personale e di attrezzature. Per questo è necessaria una polizia unica per il controllo dell'immigrazione alle frontiere, come altresì indispensabile è una modifica delle politiche della cooperazione. Gli investimenti nei paesi dai quali proviene il grande flusso migratorio dovranno essere legati alla verifica della loro efficacia e alla disponibilità alla cooperazione fra polizie.

Da un altro punto di vista, un'Europa che superi gli attuali confini e voglia finalmente diventare protagonista di un'azione di pace dovrà anche darsi chiare direttive di politica estera. Se vorrà veramente essere forte, l'Unione non potrà non tener conto di un nuovo rapporto privilegiato con la Russia di Putin e non potrà fare a meno di essere protagonista nell'area del Mediterraneo. Proprio di recente, del resto, nella tormentata vicenda della Basilica della Natività di Betlemme, abbiamo potuto verificare quanto importante possa essere l'azione europea per disinascere la mina del terrorismo e favorire una pace duratura tra Israele e palestinesi.

Più in generale, riteniamo che tutti i paesi europei debbano far propria la grande direttrice politica mediterranea, fondamentale non solo per le questioni dell'immigrazione e degli equilibri geopolitici, ma soprattutto in relazione alle prospettive di crescita economica del continente, le quali rendono peraltro necessaria la costituzione di una vera Banca del Mediterraneo.

Concludendo, signor Presidente, per quanto riguarda il modello istituzionale della PESC e della PESD, occorre rivedere il principio dell'unanimità in seno al Consiglio ed aprire la strada alle cooperazioni rafforzate, evitando tuttavia di costituire direttori di pochi grandi Stati. Naturalmente toccherà al Parlamento europeo più forte il ruolo di indirizzo e controllo in materia di politica estera: una politica estera che, nella sua attuazione operativa, dovrà vedere, naturalmente, un miglior coordinamento tra Consiglio e Commissione.

Attalidis (Cypriot Government). - Mr President, it has been repeatedly pointed out in our discussions that the external action of the Union must be strengthened. National debates, as well as public opinion polls, show that this is an area where European citizens favour stronger Union action.

The secretariat document on external action interestingly points out that the decisions on whether and how far we use the existing options provided for by the Treaties depends entirely on the political will of the actors involved and that there are no impediments deriving from the delimitation of competences between the Union and the Member States. This indicates that progress in this area is not only a question of designing more effective instruments, it is also a question of forging the necessary common political will.

Common will and common interest do not yet extend to all areas. This fact limits the scope of action and the speed of possible progress. At the same time, we must bear in mind the enormous importance of the Union's international action. The aims enshrined in the Treaties are too important to be left without effective means of pursuit.

So we must find ways to strengthen the trend towards the definition of the common interest in joint action and, in parallel with this, gradually advance to make the instruments available more effective.

More use of the instrument of common strategies will have many advantages. It would lead to the definition of more areas of common interest, it enables more flexibility in decision-making within the common strategy and it makes possible the coordination of the various components of external action.

A necessary element of enhanced external action is greater coordination and cooperation between the Commission and the High Representative.

One of the aims of this cooperation could be to propose additional common strategies or joint actions. This does not exclude the extension of the method used in the area of external trade, though in this case we must be clear that the Commission would retain its autonomy and right of initiative in other areas.

Establishing Europe-wide institutions in the area of foreign relations and security would be important in promoting the convergence of analyses and views. A European institute of foreign relations and a European diplomatic academy could be considered.

Peterle (Parl.-SI). - Mr. President, today we are debating the future of Europe together with the younger generation. Older generations in Slovenia went through

160 fascism, communism, two World Wars and, eleven years ago, Slovenia was attacked by the former Yugoslav army.

161 I come from a place where, over the last ten years, very convincing arguments have been made in favour of developing a common foreign and security policy. In the Western Balkans, for example, such arguments are still produced when crises arise.

162 Developments in turbulent parts of south-eastern Europe have built an awareness of the need for a common defence and security policy. I am very happy that foreign and security policy is one of the key phrases in this Convention. It is admittedly one of the most demanding, but hopefully also one of the most promising phrases used in this forum.

163 Without wishing this to sound like a slogan, I would like to point out that the 164 European Union must be able to provide peace and security in its own territory in 165 partnership with the United States of America, and also export peace across the 166 globe. We must answer the question of whether, as a Union, we should focus on the diversity of our various foreign policies or have an efficient unified policy.

167 This Convention should aim to make a big step forward towards a unified common and security policy instead of making cosmetic embellishments to existing achievements. This will probably be more difficult than the introduction of the single currency. We have to be sensitive enough to define the scope of our common policy and the means and procedures we should use to implement it. I cannot imagine a 168 strong euro combined with a weak CFSP. All pillars of the European Union should stand firm. We cannot walk on one leg. <BRK>

172 Serracino-Inglott (Gouv.-MT). - Mr President, the sixth and last, but certainly not least, of the questions posed by the Praesidium to guide our debate concerns the 173 mode of representation of the European Union with third states. I will restrict myself to just one additional consideration in support of the point made by our colleague 174 from Italy, to the effect that the European Union has a special mission in the Mediterranean world.

There is a reason why the non-European Mediterranean world constitutes a field within which the external action of the European Union needs to be deployed in a very special way through specifically designed instruments: because there is a sea between the European and the non-European part of the Mediterranean world. It is the only inland sea of its kind on the surface of the earth. It provides an interface and factor of commonality rather than a frontier and barrier between north and south; a rich repository of resources both natural and cultural, which - rationally - can only be managed in an holistic way, through a cooperative endeavour between the European and non-European sides of the same sea.

So it is necessary for the European Union to create some kind of special diplomatic agency which can deal with the non-European Mediterranean states in an exceptionally privileged way. The existence of such an agency - which could eventually be responsible for the cooperative and holistic management of all the resources of the sea - would provide perhaps the most effective network to promote peace and development in the area. <BRK>

Bonde (PE). - Hr. formand, Europas eliter diskuterer, om den fælles udenrigs-, sikkerheds og forsvarspolitik skal styres af en næstformand i Kommissionen eller en rådsformand. Målet er ikke bare at tale med en stemme i verden, nu skal der også handles i fællesskab.

Udviklingspolitikken skal gøres til et stormagtsinstrument og lægges ind under udenrigsministrenes råd. Handelsaftaler skal udstyres med hjemmel til at blande sig i andre landes politik. Vi skal have øget fælles udenrigspolitisk repræsentation.

Militærmagt skal kunne bruges, når diplomatiet ikke længere rækker. EU er på vej til at blive en supermagt.

Supermagter lader ikke deres handlinger begrænse af FN, og derfor skal EU heller ikke være begrænset til kun at kunne handle militært, når FN giver mandat til det.
Den såkaldte fredsskabelse i Nice-traktaten er ikke bundet til folkeretten og FN. Den

175 eneste reelle begrænsning er, at EU-landene skal være enige for at kunne bruge det fælles militær. Men den begrænsning kan fjernes, uden at man spørger vælgerne om lov.

176 Så vi står over for en ny enhed i den internationale politik, som i andre lande vil kunne opfattes som en statsdannelse. Flertallet i Konventet formentlig, vil gøre EU til en militær supermagt som USA. Jeg spørger: er det klogt? Alle militære 177 stormagter har indtil nu altid været involveret i krig. USA havde sit Vietnam, Sovjet sit Afghanistan. Hvorfor skulle en ny militært bevæbnede europæisk supermagt være så meget anderledes.

178 Jeg tror, det er klogere at adskille civil udenrigspolitik og militærmagt og holde forsvaret i NATO og fredsskabelse i FN og OSCE. Jeg tror, verden har mere brug 179 for, at EU opträder som en civil stormagt med tilbud om bistand til bæredygtig udvikling. Det er bedre at forberede gavmilde forslag til topmødet i Johannesburg og 180 bruge ressourcerne til gavn for miljø og udvikling.

181 Så til sidst lidt om formerne. I dag hedder de udenrigspolitiske instrumenter fælles strategier og aktioner. De binder politisk, men kan ikke kontrolleres af Domstolen.
Jeg foreslår en forenkling, så alle udenrigspolitiske beslutninger fremover vedtages som henstillinger. Så er det op til landene, om de vil følge dem eller have deres egen 182 udenrigspolitiske stemme. Derved kan vi understrege, at EU er et samarbejde mellem selvstændige lande og ikke en ny supermagt, som skal gøre USA rangen stridig som verdens leder. <BRK>

183 Mr. President, the elite of Europe discusses whether the common foreign-, security- and defence policies should be governed by a vice minister in the Commission or a board president. The aim is not only to speak with one voice in the world, now it should also be acted 184 together.

The development policy has to be made a super-power tool and put in under the board of the minister of foreign affairs. Trade agreements must be equipped with a title to interfere in the politics of other countries. We must have increased common foreign political representation. It should be possible to use military power when the diplomacy is no longer sufficient. EU is on the way to become a super power.

Super powers do not let their acts be limited by UN, and therefore should EU also not be limited to only use military force when the UN gives a mandate. The so called peacemaking in the Nice Treaty is not bounded by international law and the UN. The only real limitation is that the EU countries must agree before a common military force can be used. But this limitation can be removed without asking the voters for permission.

We are therefore facing a new entity in the international politics that might be taken by the other countries as a making of a state. The majority of the Convention will make EU a military super power like US. I ask: Is that wise? All military super powers have so far always been involved in wars. USA had Vietnam and Soviet had Afghanistan.
Why would a new military armed European super power be so different?

I think it is wiser to separate civil foreign policy and military power, and keep the defence in NATO and peace making in UN and OSCE. I think the world has a larger need for EU as a civil great power with the offer of assistance to sustainable development. It is better to prepare generous suggestions to the top meeting in Johannesburg and use the resources as benefit for the environment and development.

186

188

Then in the end something with regard to the forms; Today the foreign political tools are called common strategies and actions. They bind politically, but can not be controlled by the Court. I suggest a simplification so that all foreign political decisions from now on will be agreed as recommendations. Then it is up to the nations whether they want to follow them or have their own foreign political voice. Thereby can we emphasise that EU is a cooperation between independent states and not a new super power that wants to challenge USA as the leader of the world.

Michel (Ch.E/G.-BE). - Monsieur le Président, Messieurs les Vice-Présidents, chers Collègues, parler des relations extérieures de l'Union, c'est parler de l'Europe politique. L'identité politique de l'Union est largement tributaire de notre volonté réelle de développer une politique étrangère efficace. Cela implique une politique de sécurité et de défense crédible qui présuppose, bien entendu, des engagements solides en termes de capacité. Le monde change. De nouveaux défis apparaissent. Les citoyens ne cessent de nous adresser des signaux clairs qui traduisent à la fois des incertitudes mais aussi des attentes. Ils souhaitent que l'Union soit, non pas le simple sujet ou observateur d'un monde en mutation permanente, mais plutôt un véritable acteur sur la scène internationale, avec une nature qui ne correspondrait bien entendu pas à celle des États-Unis. Je crois pouvoir ajouter que c'est très bien ainsi. Dans cette perspective, j'aimerais partager avec vous les considérations suivantes : <BRK>

De Europese Unie is het product van een internationale samenwerking gebouwd op de diversiteit van de naties en belichaamt een nooit eerder bereikt integramodel. In dat opzicht fascineert ze en is ze ongetwijfeld voor velen een inspiratiebron. Op het vlak van de buitenlandse betrekkingen biedt het Europees model een opmerkelijke meerwaarde, wat haar tot een unieke organisatie in haar soort maakt. De Unie beschikt immers over een brede waaier instrumenten die ze ten dienste van haar buitenlandse beleid kan stellen. Ik denk hier met name aan de instrumenten van de eerste pijler, zoals het gemeenschappelijk handelsbeleid, ontwikkelingssamenwerking, humanitaire hulp, de politieke dialoog. Deze specificiteit stelt ons in staat onze aanpak aan te passen aan het soort uitdaging waarmee we geconfronteerd worden, onze initiatieven te nuanceren en de doeltreffendheid ervan te versterken. <BRK>

The European Union is the product of an international cooperation built on the diversity of nations and embodies a unique integration model. From that perspective the EU is a fascinating phenomenon and it's undoubtedly for many a source of inspiration. Concerning foreign affairs, the European model offers a remarkable surplus value which makes her an organization unique in her kind. The Union has a broad range of instruments at its disposal that it can put to service its foreign administration. I am particularly thinking of the instruments of the first pillar, such as the common trade administration, development cooperation, humanitarian aid. This specificity enables us to adept our approach to the kind of challenge we are facing, to nuance our initiatives and to strengthen their effectiveness. <BRK>

Toutefois, la crédibilité de notre politique extérieure dépend de notre efficacité et de l'adéquation des instruments aux objectifs que nous nous fixons.

La formule actuelle, à savoir le Haut représentant, a prouvé son efficacité.

211

Dès lors, il me paraît indispensable de la renforcer. En d'autres termes, il convient de le doter d'un droit d'initiative aux côtés des États membres et de la Commission, également présider le Conseil Affaires générales et Relations extérieures.

Enfin, selon moi, le nouveau contexte stratégique, apparu au lendemain du 11 septembre, doit nous amener à revoir ou du moins à remettre en discussion les tâches de Petersberg .

Pour terminer, j'ajouterais que nous devons nous donner les moyens des politiques que nous entendons mener. Cela doit se traduire par l'engagement des budgets nécessaires afin d'assurer de réelles capacités militaires mais aussi une politique européenne d'armement appuyée sur des programmes de recherche et de développement en matière de haute technologie.

Je suis convaincu, Monsieur le Président, que notre approche pragmatique et réaliste est de nature à créer les conditions favorables à l'apparition d'une véritable culture stratégique européenne. <BRK>

Duhamel (PE). - Monsieur le Président, j'aimerais poser une demande, au risque de déplaire, et une question, pour détendre l'atmosphère. Je commencerai par la demande au risque de déplaire.

Nous, conventionnels, jeunes conventionnels et citoyens européens, voulons une politique étrangère de l'Europe. Nous le disons et le répétons. Maintenant, dans les travaux de cette Convention, je voudrais autre chose que des conventionnels qui redisent la même chose en y apportant des nuances ou des demandes particulières, un peu plus démocratiques, parfois un peu moins ennuyeuses et plus précises. Je souhaiterais que l'on sorte de l'hypocrisie des relations entre Présidium et conventionnels. Je demande au Président, M. Giscard d'Estaing, et aux Vice-Présidents, MM. Amato et Dehaene, d'avancer dans le débat démocratique avec nous. Ils disposent d'éléments de réflexion. Il est donc impossible qu'ils ne travaillent pas sur les mêmes questions. Ils s'expriment parfois ici ou là, plutôt en privé. Mais quand ils sont à la Convention et donc au coeur de ces questions, nous ne les entendons pas.

Quelles sont, selon vous, les options pertinentes afin d'avoir, demain, cette vraie politique extérieure de l'Union ? Quel est le type d'articulation souhaitable entre Conseil et Commission ou quels sont, au moins, les scénarios de réflexion que vous jugez pertinents ? Il n'est pas possible de continuer sans que, jamais, vous ne nous disiez un mot là-dessus. Je vous avais interrogé en vous demandant si vous étiez Blair ou Barnier. Vous ne m'aviez pas répondu, avec l'immense talent qui est le vôtre. Accepteriez-vous de répondre, fût-ce avec un peu moins de talent ? MM. Amato et Dehaene pourraient-ils, eux-aussi, nous faire partager leurs idées et participer ainsi au débat démocratique ? De cette façon, la pause estivale serait également nourrie de leurs réflexions. Il n'est pas normal qu'il n'en soit pas ainsi. Je vous demande donc de prendre cette exigence en compte. Après tout, elle est plutôt gratifiante pour moi.

J'en viens maintenant à la question complémentaire, visant à détendre l'atmosphère. Pourriez-vous nous expliquer, Monsieur le Président, à quoi correspond cette sorte de tortue ou de dragon vert qui est entre vous et Sir John Kerr? Faut-il y voir un premier élément de réponse ? <BRK>

Le Président. - Je vais répondre à M. Duhamel. Ce sera d'ailleurs très commode, la deuxième question fournissant la réponse à la première. Ce petit animal est une tortue chinoise. C'est un symbole de longévité et, en même temps, le symbole d'une démarche prudente qui aboutit à son objectif. C'est pourquoi cette tortue a une tête de dragon. Et c'est un peu la démarche de notre Convention, qui avance de manière progressive mais qui, lorsqu'il le faudra, saisira dans ses griffes le texte final de la Convention.

Je l'ai placée là-bas en prévision d'une éventuelle question de M. Duhamel sur le rythme de nos travaux. Je préferais être protégé par ma tortue dragon. Je vais vous répondre aussi parce que je sais bien que la presse, qui nous observe et nous écoute, aime ce genre de débat. Si nous vous présentons des conclusions, à ce stade, vous nous reprocheriez d'abuser de votre fonction. Nous sommes là pour que vous débattiez. J'ajouterais que dans ce qui a été dit aujourd'hui, pour le traiter avec un peu d'ironie, nous avons entendu des interventions très remarquables, émouvantes pour certaines, utiles pour d'autres. Si vous écoutez bien ces interventions, vous constaterez qu'elles dégagent une espèce de corpus de la Convention. C'est de cette manière que nous préférons procéder.

Toutefois, j'insiste sur le fait que ni M. Dehaene, ni M. Amato, ni moi-même, ne nous déroberons lorsque nous serons amenés à vous fournir l'expression de notre propre conviction et de ce que nous retirons de nos débats. Nous le ferons en conclusion et non pas pour vous empêcher de discuter librement et de formuler vous-mêmes vos propositions. C'est ce que ma tortue vous répond avec sa petite voix, M. Duhamel. <BRK>

Hain (Ch.E/G.-GB). - Mr President, while the tortoise has been appropriate for this stage up to the summer, I hope that we have a hare ahead, to make more speed.

Britain wants Europe to be a powerful player on the international stage with a strong and successful external policy.

We need to make use of all our trade, the international development of Community instruments, the common foreign and security policy and the new European security and defence policy. I welcome the four issues raised in the Praesidium paper.

Although the Seville reforms are an important start, more needs to be done to get real and essential coherence in the European Union's external policy.

My proposal would be that the new external relations sub-formation of the General Affairs Council should be chaired by the High Representative.

Most people recognise that, amongst its other problems, a rotating presidency system undermines continuity and, therefore, an effective European Union foreign policy.

Without reform, a serious foreign policy will not be deliverable. Washington will ignore Europe, and we will not get the partnership with the United States Mr Peterle rightly called for.

Secondly, on common interests, I agree with the Praesidium paper that we need to look at the role of the European Council and the General Affairs and External Relations Council.

All of us, both Member States and the Commission, need to bring our different knowledge and expertise to the table. We should consider whether the External Relations Commissioner and the High Representative should make joint proposals to the Council.

Thirdly, on flexibility, we should make the historical and traditional diversity within the Union a strength and asset. For example, in East Timor, Europe acted promptly 236 and effectively because the Netherlands and Portugal had close associations there.

Equally, a Member State may wish to act because of its own national interests, while the Union chooses not to. Britain in Sierra Leone, for instance, in what Mr Brok called "a coalition of the willing". It should not be seen as a challenge to, but as an asset of, the European Union.

237 Fourthly, although the appointment of the High Representative has provided a clearer 238 Union voice, as Mr Michel said, this should be strengthened by giving him the formal right of initiative in common foreign and security policy issues and a greater say about CFSP resources. He should also attend Commission meetings on external policy.

239 Former Yugoslavia is a striking example of what Europe could do: consistent diplomacy, coordinated with the US and Russia, tough economic and political sanctions, the promise of aid and the engagement of democratic forces, and the active involvement of both Commissioner Patten and Mr Solana.

240 Britain wants Europe to be a global force for good - preventing and solving conflict, 241 conquering world poverty, supporting international environmental protection, 242 backing human rights and democracy, and promoting equality and social justice. But, 243 as Mr McDonagh said, the common foreign and security policy will only be strong if 244 it draws on the experience and assets of the Member States. As he said, 245 communitisation will simply not work. The credibility of the European Union in foreign policy depends on the national assets and the diplomatic forces of its governments, its military assets and its diplomats, but not on Community rules or the legislative powers that come from the Commission. If foreign policy is to enjoy 246 legitimacy, there must be accountability through elected governments to national 247 parliaments.

248 We are ready to contribute fully to the collective effort, using our global diplomacy and our national assets. We need strong institutional structures at European Union level, but we must also recognise that this sort of collective effort requires tailor-made procedures and methods of operation with a clear link back to national 249 parliaments.

My suggested reforms will help to deliver this. <BRK>

Lennmarker (Parl.-SE). - Mr President, I will start by telling you of three recent experiences that, in a way, shape my view on this matter.

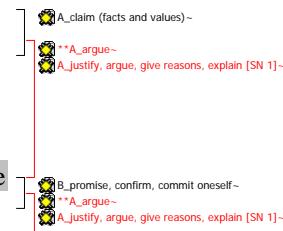

The first is very successful: the enlargement process, where the Union acts decisively, in a coordinated and very efficient manner. The second is the Balkans, in the first half of the 1990s. That was a catastrophe - Europe could not act, was too weak and did not have the capacity to do its job. The third is Africa where Europe could do much more. We spend a lot on development aid - hundreds of billions of euros throughout the decades - but still we achieve very little because we do not have a coordinated policy.

In the light of these three recent experiences, convergence of views is not the big problem. I am sometimes astonished at how uniform the attitude of the Member States is. The big problem is a lack of coherence. The Union acts in very different, even contradictory ways.

One big problem is that the Union is still too protectionist. Protectionism hinders the effective use of the foreign policy of the Union. It is now time that we set as a goal the dismantling of tariffs. That was done in Rome, in terms of European trade - 45 or 50 years ago. It is now time for us, in this Convention, to set the goal of eliminating tariffs in Europe. That should be our goal in the policy of the future.

When it comes to the decision-making procedures, it is time we no longer had three units: the Commission, the Council and the foreign office of the presidency. It is time to merge them into one. We cannot have three foreign ministries or state departments. We need one that coordinates the policies. That is the only way. We should think about creating a decision-making mechanism within one pillar. We need a special decision-making process when it comes to foreign policy. It is not legislation, not the budget, but something more that requires coordination.

Finally, on Question No 6: first of all, the Union should do what it has said it will do, namely ensure we have the necessary capacities. Sometimes I feel that it is only 250 Britain that takes this seriously. The others run away from their responsibilities. We must do that first. It is a responsibility of national parliaments, not the Union itself.

We in the national parliaments are responsible.

251 Secondly, we should think about making arms exports a Community matter and also 252 a part of the single market. That would save billions of euros for the taxpayers of 253 Europe. Perhaps these could be used to enhance our capacity for peacemaking and 254 peacekeeping. <BRK>

Duff (PE). - Mr President, I would like to ask Mr Hain to clarify something he said.
He said he would wish Mr Solana to have more power and more resources.
My question is: whose resources? Is he referring to the European Union budget? If so, why does he think that Mr Solana should be solely and exclusively responsible to national parliaments? What role does he foresee for the European Parliament in all this? <BRK>

Hain (Ch.E/G.-GB). - Mr President, the resources would come from the Council. Of course the European Parliament would have the ability to debate and so on, but this is essentially a matter that is answerable to national governments. It is national 265 governments who commit their troops. It is national governments who will provide 266 the diplomatic assets. I am open to ideas from Mr Duff or from anybody else as to 267 what the European Parliament's role might be in debating and in influencing, but this that truth you will not get a serious foreign policy. <BRK>

Haenel (Parl.-FR). - Monsieur le Président, tous les collègues qui se sont exprimés jusqu'à maintenant sont tous d'accord pour affirmer qu'il faut une action extérieure de l'Union européenne beaucoup plus efficace. Mais nous faisons comme si tous les pays membres et tous les pays candidats étaient d'accord sur les objectifs à atteindre et sur les voies et moyens pour y parvenir.

Or, nous savons bien que nous n'avancerons jamais tous ensemble, au même rythme et au même moment, et que donc il y aura nécessairement une avant-garde, peu importe le terme employé, un groupe d'États qui voudra aller plus vite et plus loin et qui n'acceptera pas les ralentisseurs ou les freins. Il me paraît donc souhaitable que, le moment venu, nous abordions, dans le cadre de notre réflexion, le système des coopérations renforcées dans le Traité. Je dis bien en envisageant des coopérations renforcées, assouplies et plus ouvertes. Je pense rejoindre M. Fini sur ce point. Cela

Berès (PE). - Monsieur le Président, je souhaitais demander à M. Peter Hain de des Etats Membres. L'un des outils pour exprimer cette diversité ne serait-il justement pas l'utilisation des dispositions présentes aujourd'hui dans le Traité de Nice, s'agissant de la coopération renforcée, pour autant qu'on en étende le champ d'application ? Pourrions-nous imaginer au sein de cette diversité que les valeurs, les droits et les concepts figurant dans la Charte des Droits fondamentaux soient le socle d'une conception commune de la dimension extérieure de la politique étrangère et de sécurité de l'Union dans le monde ? <BRK>

Hain (Ch.E/G.-GB). - Mr President, first of all, I am open to looking at the ideas

<sup>274</sup> Mrs Berès suggests. We are not approaching this with a fixed mind.
<sup>275</sup> In addition, on the issue of budgets and resources, the European Parliament has responsibility, at least in part, for some CFSP finance held at a central level. If we were going to get extra money for policing - for example, for civilian policing operations in the Balkans and elsewhere where we might want Europe to be active - then clearly Parliament would have to be consulted. That is a way in which we could work in partnership.
<sup>278</sup>
<sup>279</sup> I do not see that it is realistic to communite foreign policy. It will not work in practice. Let us start with something practical and serious, not something idealistic that is not deliverable. <BRK>

Fayot (Parl.-LU). - Monsieur le Président, pour être efficace et crédible,

<sup>288</sup> Ainsi, faut-il une seule tête pour l'action extérieure ? Je pense qu'il faudra sans doute une ou plusieurs têtes pensantes. En effet, n'oublions pas que le Président de l'Europe ne sera jamais le chef de la politique étrangère comme l'est le Président des États-Unis. L'essentiel, à mon avis, n'est pas la représentation, mais plutôt la façon d'élaborer la politique étrangère et, dans ce domaine, j'ai plus confiance en la méthode communautaire qu'en la méthode intergouvernementale.

Évidemment, il y a un revers à la médaille. Dans les débats institutionnels, la pensée dominante est actuellement de restreindre le nombre des commissaires, au nom de l'efficacité. On verrait dès lors un Vice-Président de la Commission en charge d'un énorme conglomérat en matière d'action extérieure qui engloberait la politique étrangère, la coopération au développement, le commerce extérieur, etc. Dans ce contexte, la politique de développement, par exemple, risquerait d'être instrumentalisée pour les besoins de l'action extérieure. Ce processus a déjà été enclenché avec la suppression du Conseil Développement et son intégration au Conseil Affaires générales. Or, une des caractéristiques importantes de la Commission est sa collégialité et l'engagement de chaque Commissaire pour son domaine. Je verrais très bien une Commission avec plusieurs commissaires chargés des différents aspects de l'action extérieure, à condition d'avoir un Président, ou un Vice-Président, fort, qui aurait pour tâche de les coordonner.

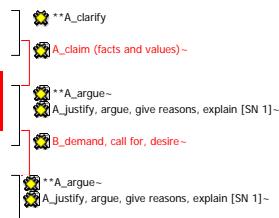

Mais, bien évidemment, au-delà de ces aspects, c'est plus que jamais la cohérence des politiques de l'Union européenne sur le fond qui doit imposer la cohérence de l'action extérieure de l'Union. <BRK>

Barnier (CE). - Monsieur le Président, la méthode communautaire, que M. Hain

Christophersen (Ch.E/G.-DK). - Hr. formand, jeg behøver ikke at gentage, hvad der er sagt om behovet for at forstærke samarbejdet på det område, vi taler om. Men jeg har fire bemærkninger, jeg gerne vil gøre.
 Der er for det første brug for en bedre udvikling af fælles strategier. Man må være meget mere kohærent og samtænke, hvad man vil gøre på det handelopolitiske område, på udviklingsområdet, på det sikkerhedspolitiske område og også på det forsvarspolitiske område. Der er ofte en mangel på sammenhæng i den måde, der

306 tænkes på, og den måde, der dermed ageres på. Det kræver derfor en styrkelse af fællesskabsmetoden og en mere effektiv måde at træffe beslutninger på.
For det andet - og det er delvis en bemærkning til Peter Hain - er der brug for, at Fællesskabet i højere grad taler med en stemme i relation til tredjelande og i [redacted] internationale organisationer. Men det er ikke tilstrækkeligt, at hr. Kissinger eller hans efterfølger ved, hvilket telefonnummer han skal ringe til i Europa. Det er ligeså vigtigt, at der ikke, hver gang der er et problem, er fire europæiske regeringschefer, der ringer til hr. Kissingers efterfølger eller til den amerikanske præsident. Problemet er jo ikke bare, at amerikanerne ikke ved, hvem de skal henvende sig til. Problemet er jo ofte, at de store europæiske lande fører hver deres politik i forhold til De Forenede Stater. Det er i langt højere grad vores reelle problem. Derfor er der brug 307 for nogle institutionelle forenklinger og en meget bedre koordinering af, hvad 308 Kommissionen, Rådet og medlemsstaterne gør.

Min tredje bemærkning drejer sig om ressourcer. Det forsvarspolitiske er et særligt 309 kapitel - det vil jeg ikke tale om her. Men generelt kan man sige, at Fællesskabet 310 disponerer over meget betydelige ressourcer både direkte på sit budget i form af 311 finansielle instrumenter, i form af Den Europæiske Udviklingsfond og gennem medlemsstaternes indflydelse i IMF og andre internationale organisationer og [redacted] 312 finansielle institutioner. Men det tager tid, det går alt for langsomt at få anvendt disse instrumenter. Der er ikke en tilstrækkelig god koordinering af deres anvendelse, og derfor har vi en "suboptimal" udenrigspolitisk anvendelse af de ressourcer, der står til vores rådighed.

Min sidste bemærkning drejer sig om den fælles udenrigs- og sikkerhedspolitiks 313 konstitutionelle stilling. Vi skal være opmærksomme på, at i alle medlemsstaterne har denne del af det politiske liv sin egen orden, sin egen konstitutionelle placering.
Her er det i langt højere grad regeringerne, der har ansvaret, og Parlamenteerne, der efterfølgende kan kritisere regeringernes dispositioner. Det system bliver man nødt til at lade afspejle også i Fællesskabets organisation af sin fælles udenrigs- og sikkerhedspolitik. <BRK>

Tranlsation: 4-042

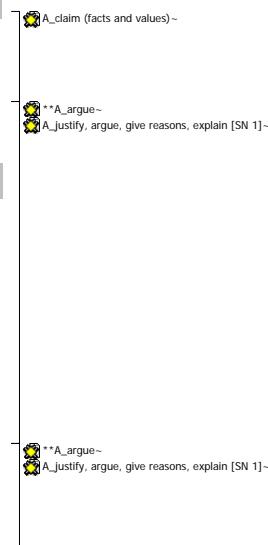

Mr. President, I do not have to repeat what has been said about the need to make the cooperation stronger on the subject we are discussing. But I do have four remarks I would like to make.

First, it is necessary to have a better development of common strategies. One has to be much more coherent and think together what one wants to do on the area of trade, development and security, and also on the area of defence politics. It is often an incoherence in the way of thinking and thereby the way of acting. It is therefore necessary to improve the method of community and a more efficient way to make decisions. [redacted]

Second - and this is partly a comment to Peter Hain - it is a need for the Community to a larger extent speak with one voice in relation to third party and in international organisations. But it is not sufficient that Mr.
Kissinger or his successor knows which phone number he should dial to Europe. It is just as important that when ever there is a problem, not four European state leaders call Mr. Kissinger's successor or the [redacted] American President. The problem is not only that the Americans don't know who to contact. The problem is often that the big European states each have different policies towards the US. That is to a much larger extent our real problem. Therefore, it is necessary with some [redacted] institutional simplifications and a much better coordination of what the Commission, the Board and the member states do.

314 My third remark is about resources. One special thing is the defence policy, I will not deal with that here. But generally one can say that the Community has disposal of significant resources both direct towards its budget through financial tools, through the European 315 Developmental Fond and through the member states influence on IMF and other international organisations and financial institutions. But it takes time, it is too slow to use these tools. It is not a sufficient coordination of the resources we have available.

318
321 My last remark is about the constitutional position of the common foreign and safety policies. We have to be aware of that this part of the political life has its own order and its own constitutional location in all the member states. Here it is to a larger extent the governments that have the responsibilities, and the Parliaments that afterwards can 322 criticise the arrangements of the governments. This system has to be reflected in the Community's organisation of the common foreign- and defence politics.

Κατηφόρης (Ch.E/G.-GR). - Katefores:

Mr. President, our Conference has already positioned itself with emphasis for the stronger international presence of Europe. That was the goal that got the biggest support from my colleagues, just as the fact that 70% of the European co-citizens seek more, much more Europe on the international scene.

It is a natural preference that is at the same time not natural. It is not natural because Europe today does not face direct outside threats that would force it to move its defense mechanism for its self-protection. It is natural for the fact that the European citizen sees a political and economic superpower of Europe that does not translate into corresponding international diplomatic presence.

Oppositely, he sees the Union from one side to be overshadowed by the USA and from the other side to face the sometimes offensive behavior of small countries that have as their only positive attribute that they have so much (thrasos/mut). The European citizen is annoyed with this situation more for a reason of ethos and good principles and less for opportunistic reasons. This feeling of annoyance is strengthened by the 'showy', and somehow hard to understand for the European, exemptional behavior of the US on many issues, of which one some are of ethical importance, such as the International Criminal Court; some of strategic importance, such as the one-sidedness in the middle east; some with regards to the survival of the planet, such as the one-sided leave from the Kyoto Protocol; and some are the self-beneficiary disobedience of the important rules of free trade.

The EU citizen would worry less if she saw that what the EU cannot accomplish the national entities could, but she sees that there is not the slightest hope of opposition towards the giants that surround us in the international scene. We do not have to choose between a European foreign policy and national foreign policy. We have to choose between EU foreign policy and the non-existence of a foreign policy.

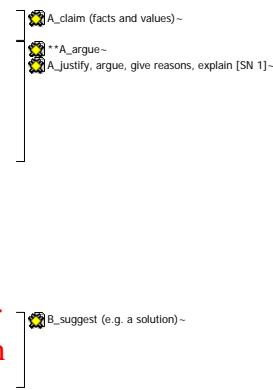

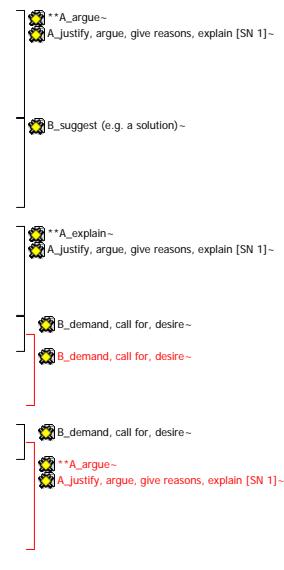

325 Today's constitution that we are discussing and that we want to better gives us a base for the creation of a unified foreign policy and in reality some steps have been taken, which are however very small in comparison with the size of the needs and the problems. We have to agree on some steps that will put us, not into a new stage because that will be late, but on a new path.

327 The first thing that I would say is our conference to ask for a yearly grand-scale conference in the national parliaments for the international relations. To that will follow a large discussion in the European Parliament with introduction by the 'conference members' that will showcase the attitudes of the national bodies.

328
330
331 The conversation will end in the determination, each time, of a one sector at least where the uniformity of the Union's organs will be replaced with increased majority and joint decision making process. This way we can gradually reach a unified European dogma of a joint foreign policy.

332
334
336
337 Secondly, the member states have to decide that they will have a unified diplomatic representation and third, the legal organs will unify in a predetermined time frame, which will be decided by the meeting, the responsibilities of the representative of the Council and the person responsible for foreign affair issues.

339 All this effort has to give priority to the furthering of the European values and later for Europe's benefits. It is time for us to note that the biggest threat for us is to find ourselves in a world that has rejected our values. If that is lost, everything else will be lost too. Europe gave birth to Machiavelli, and the time has come for us to overtake him, exactly so that we can continue the journey of the grand society that the Renaissance set the foundations of in Europe.

Hamzik (Parl.-SK). - Mr President, establishing a strong common foreign and security policy represents one of the most important new priorities for the future. This is an area which has, until now, been considered to be the most internal part of a state's national sovereignty. Despite achieving only partial progress thus far, history proves that this policy can be further coordinated and harmonised. It is obvious that for a long time yet this policy will remain a common and not a single European policy, as it does not rule out the ability of each Member State to implement its own foreign policy. However, a broad consensus, as well as the application of a certain degree of flexibility, are required whilst maintaining the internal solidarity and efficiency of a unified procedure.

The implementation of the CFSP requires a further shift towards Community-level decision-making, including an extension of the areas with decisions made by qualified majority. This should be related to the strengthening and deepening of the role of the EU as a sovereign entity in international relations. As such, only military aspects of cooperation should be excluded from this communitarisation process and remain the domain of intergovernmental policy-making.

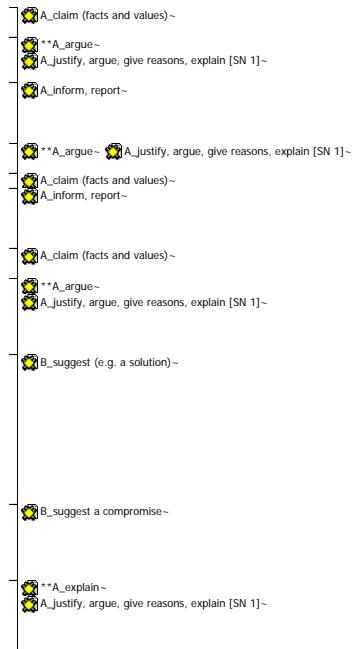

The fight against international terrorism requires the bond between internal and external security to be strengthened, for instance, between military and intelligence bodies. This enhanced interaction between foreign and defence policies should be reflected in the establishment of corresponding agencies.

Enhanced cooperation between the Commissioner for International Relations and the

341 EU High Representative for CFSP should equally contribute to the reinforcement of the EU's role. In the long-term perspective, both offices could be matched which would, however, require the application of the Community method to non-military aspects of the CFSP.

342 Equally, any possibility of weakening or questioning the transatlantic bond should be rejected. An enhanced and efficient EU must not weaken transatlantic solidarity.
343 Newly established institutions within the European Security and Defence Policy, 344 which constitutes part of the broader CFSP, highlighted the EU's new involvement 345 and role in the security and defence area but also have produced further 346 complications regarding the relations between the individual institutions within the 347 aforementioned policy.

350 Glotz (Ch.E/G.-DE). - Herr Präsident! Es ist sichtbar, dass es hier zwei Linien gibt, 351 eine eher intergouvernementale und eine eher integrationistische.

352 Aber ich will doch feststellen: Schon die Einrichtung des Hohen Repräsentanten war 353 ja ein erster Schritt in Richtung auf eine eher gemeinsame Außenpolitik. Es gibt jetzt 354 noch ein paar Übereinstimmungen, die darüber hinausgehen.

355 Auch Peter Hain hat ein Initiativrecht, also ein formales Vorschlagsrecht, für den 356 Hohen Repräsentanten gefordert sowie den Vorsitz im Rat bei der Behandlung außenpolitischer Fragen - das ist auch etwas Neues. Es wurde auch von mehreren Sprechern in diesen außenpolitischen Fragen die Abschaffung der Troika gefordert.
Wir können nicht mit drei Mann in außenpolitische Verhandlungen gehen. Das wird 357 nie funktionieren. Man braucht in der Tat einen, der diese Verhandlungen führt.

Nun gibt es den Konflikt.

Louis Michel hat von einer Annäherung des Hohen Repräsentanten an die 358 Kommission gesprochen. Elmar Brok hat von einer Anbindung gesprochen. Die 359 schwächste Lösung hat Peter Hain vorgeschlagen, joint proposals, also gemeinsame 360 Vorschläge von Patten und Solana.

Ich möchte sagen, die deutsche Regierung vertritt in der Tat die Auffassung, die auch Elmar Brok vorgetragen hat, nämlich den Doppelhut.

Ich glaube zwar nicht, lieber Elmar Brok, dass irgendjemand hier Metternich will, auch Peter Hain nicht.

Wenn schon, sind wir in der Tat eher für Monnet, wenn es diese Alternative geben sollte. Aber jetzt geht es um die Frage, die Andrew Duff aufgeworfen hat, nämlich die einer effektiven Organisation.

Damit dieser Doppelhut effektiv agieren kann, muss er auf einen leistungsfähigen diplomatischen Dienst aufbauen können.

Ich meine, er müsste drei Elemente haben. Erstens, dass, was Patten hat, also die Generaldirektion der Kommission, die mit Außenbeziehungen befasst ist. Zweitens, eine eigenständige außenpolitische Einheit, die aus den Leuten besteht, die mit Außenpolitik im Ratssekretariat umgehen, und entsandten Diplomaten aus den Außenministerien der Mitgliedstaaten. Das wäre allerdings eine Arbeitseinheit, die sozusagen in Verantwortung des Rates tätig wäre. Drittens, die funktionierenden Außenvertretungen, die dem Doppelhut berichten, und dabei sollten die Kommissionsdelegationen in EU-Delegationen umgewandelt werden.

Das heißt, wir glauben, wir brauchen in der Tat eine Figur, die eine doppelte Funktion hat, die einerseits Kommissar ist, aber auch im Vertrauen und im Auftrag des Rates in den außenpolitischen Fragen handelt, weil ich einige wichtige Mitgliedstaaten sehe, die in der Tat nicht bereit sein werden, diesen Hohen Repräsentanten einfach als Kommissar einzurordnen wie alle anderen Kommissare.
Insofern wäre der Doppelhut eine Kompromissmöglichkeit, die uns jetzt die
Möglichkeit gäbe, zwar nicht eine vollständige Vergemeinschaftung der Außenpolitik zustande zu bringen, wie wir Deutschen sie in langer Frist für sinnvoll halten würden, aber doch einen deutlichen Schritt nach vorne zu machen über die Verbesserung hinaus, die der Hohe Repräsentant und Solana jetzt schon gebracht haben.

364 Bruton (Parl.-IE). - Mr President, it is important to place this debate in an historical perspective. From 1948 to 1989 the Cold War froze the external relations of Europe in a particular form. Under a nuclear umbrella, dissent was minimised. Europe lived in an igloo - cold on the outside but comparatively secure and, for some, comparatively comfortable on the inside. Since 1989 the igloo has melted, allowing long-hidden grievances, dissension and threats to re-emerge.

365 Seven years ago this week, in Srebrenica, 8 000 Bosnians were murdered, the largest mass murder in Europe since 1945. This week, just a few days before that fateful anniversary, the United States delegate in the United Nations Security Council vetoed the continuance of the mandate of the United Nations police in Bosnia in pursuance of a policy that will, if it continues, eventually lead to the withdrawal of all UN peacekeeping forces from trouble spots all over the globe,. Can we afford to allow such a vacuum to develop?

366 367 Meanwhile, the freeing-up of capital movements, the fall in the cost of air travel and the explosive growth of information technology have together intensified phenomena such as stock market contagion, the global spread of disease, the gradual destruction of the global environment and the new surge of human migration.

368 369 They have exposed our societies to new threats like cyber-terrorism, bio-terrorism, the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and the colonisation of failed states like Afghanistan, Bosnia and Colombia by paramilitary organisations which respect 370 none of the rules of international order. And the capacity of individual European 371 nation states to cope with such problems has simultaneously diminished. In an open 372 economy there are financial limits on the amount of tax each state can raise for 373 security purposes and demographic limits on the number of local young people 374 available to serve in their military and police services. Who will provide the money if 375 Europe is to have its own airlift capacity rather than be solely reliant on the Americans? No one state is big enough to do that.

376 377 Against that background, the development of a common, shared external security 378 capacity for the European Union since the Helsinki summit has not been so much a 379 choice as an absolute economic and strategic necessity. European states could just not afford to do the job separately. They could not afford the duplication. Their only hope was to pool resources. The job was, and is, too important to leave solely to part-time intergovernmentalism.

I hope that my country - Ireland - notwithstanding its sporadic rhetorical neutralism, will fully accept its responsibilities in the development of a common foreign and security policy. Ireland's choice is simple. Given that we are just as open to all the threats I have mentioned as any other European country, do we want to have a say in how these threats are guarded against, or do we want to leave the responsibility and decision-making to others? For me the answer is clear. <BRK> belangrijk punt aan de orde heeft gesteld. Ik kan hem wel zeggen dat commissaris Patten al bezig is om een Europese diplomatieke dienst op te bouwen. Hij heeft daarvoor ook de steun van het Europees Parlement en daarvoor zijn inmiddels ook middelen uitgetrokken. De status van die Europese diplomatieke dienst is echter heel diffus en eigenlijk ook niet correct. Het probleem is dat de Europese ambassadeurs in de diverse landen in de wereld een lagere status hebben dan alle andere ambassadeurs. Dat betekent dat zij eigenlijk geen positie hebben zodra ze coördinerend of in de plaats van die landen die daar niet aanwezig zijn, moeten optreden.

Mijn vraag aan de Duitse regeringsvertegenwoordiger is dan ook of het niet tijd wordt om die Europese diplomatieke dienst een coördinerende status te geven, zodat hij ook werkelijk coördinerend en naar behoren in de plaats van de lidstaten kan optreden wanneer dat vanuit Raad en Commissie wordt gevraagd. <BRK>

Maij-Weggen (PE). - Sir the chairman, I wanted to react on what the German government representative, Mr. Glotz, has said. He has broken an opportunity for a European diplomatic system. I believe that with that he put a very important issue on the list of priorities. I can tell him that Commissioner Patten is already busy building a European diplomatic service. He also has the support of the European Parliament and meanwhile resources have also been mobilized for it. The status of the European diplomatic service is however quite vague and also quite incorrect. The problem is that the European ambassadors in the various countries in the world have a lower status than all other ambassadors. In fact, this means that they have no real say if they had to co-ordinate or act in the name of countries that are not present there.

Therefore my question to the German government representative is; is it not about time to give that European diplomatic service a co-ordinating status, so that it can really co-ordinate and act properly in the name of the member countries when asked by the Council and the Commission. <BRK>

Belohorská (Parl.-SK). - Mr President, if we discuss transatlantic solidarity, we also need to discuss more European responsibility in the field of defence and security. We need to establish both whether we will be friends with the United States in war and whether we will be able to provide humanitarian military action. I am very grateful, Mr President, that you proposed a new working group on this very important issue. In the Eurobarometer survey, the citizens of Europe said overwhelmingly that they would like to live in a secure Europe. <BRK>

Muñoz Alonso (Parl.-ES). - Señor Presidente, Señorías, a estas alturas del debate se han hecho propuestas muy interesantes y resulta difícil hacer aportaciones que no contribuyan más a la confusión que a la claridad del tema que nos ocupa. Voy a analizar brevemente de dónde partimos, dónde estamos y a dónde deberíamos llegar en esta cuestión de la política exterior común.

Durante muchos años, la política exterior fue la gran ausente del proceso de 397 integración, aunque cada vez ha sido más patente que el gran objetivo de la unión política se nos escapará de entre las manos si no logramos que la Unión pueda tener una proyección exterior que exprese la voz común de nuestros pueblos y de nuestros Estados y promocione y defienda en el mundo nuestro sistema de valores, basado en la paz, los derechos humanos, la libertad y la democracia.

398 Culminada con éxito la unión económica y monetaria, esta exigencia de una política exterior común se ha hecho más perentoria y muchos pensamos que, junto con la Política Común de Defensa, es el gran objetivo que la Unión debe afrontar en este primer tramo del siglo XXI y aprovechando, además, la gran ocasión que representa esta Convención.

399 Ciertamente, no partimos de cero y desde hace años se ha entendido que las competencias exteriores en el ámbito económico pertenecían a la Comunidad. A 400 partir de ahí, la Unión se ha ido convirtiendo en un destacado actor internacional, en un proceso continuo que culminó primero con el Tratado de Maastricht y después, más tarde, con el Tratado de Amsterdam. Pero si no hemos avanzado más rápido, 401 debíamos preguntarnos por qué. No se pueden disimular las dificultades de hacer una 402 Política Exterior Común en una Unión formada por Estados con prolongadas 403 trayectorias y con arraigadas tradiciones, no siempre compatibles, y, en todo caso, de compleja coordinación.

404 No es posible perder de vista que no se trata de absorber y unificar las políticas 405 exteriores de los Estados miembros, que tienen y deben seguir teniendo sus propios ámbitos de actuación exterior, de acuerdo con sus intereses y sus tradiciones. Se trata 406 de que la Unión fije unos objetivos de política exterior específicos y limitados, con 407 unas prioridades previamente establecidas y con los medios adecuados para llevarlas 408 a cabo.

409 Seguramente será necesario llevar a cabo retoques institucionales y esta tarde se han 410 hecho aquí algunas aportaciones en ese sentido, pero creo que no se puede perder de vista que el centro de gravedad tendrá que seguir siendo el Consejo Europeo, por 411 razones de obvio realismo, sin perjuicio de que se incorporen al proceso, cada vez 412 más intensamente, las otras instituciones de la Unión, especialmente el Parlamento y la Comisión.

413 Por supuesto, con la actual estructura de pilares, -en otro de los pilares también se llevan a cabo actuaciones exteriores-, creo que es indispensable llevar a cabo una política coherente y bien estructurada.

414 Quisiera señalar cuáles deberían ser los requisitos, desde mi punto de vista, de esta política exterior. Creo que son tres, fundamentalmente.

415 En primer lugar, una mayor dosis de voluntad política por parte de los Estados que les permita superar arraigados egoísmos que impiden avanzar al conjunto.

416 Ciertamente, los Estados son los jueces de sus intereses nacionales, pero la gran empresa de la construcción europea requiere superar ópticas estrechas y hacer renuncias. La renuncia ha sido clave en todo el proceso de construcción europea.

417 En segundo lugar, es necesario que se pongan al servicio de la PESC suficientes recursos materiales para permitir que la Unión esté donde tenga que estar y con los medios que sean precisos. En el horizonte está la creación del servicio exterior y de un cuerpo diplomático europeo compatible con los de los Estados miembros.

418 En tercer lugar, la Unión Europea necesita potenciar la política europea de seguridad y defensa, que forma parte indisolublemente de la PESC. Esto significa que la Unión requiere también un respaldo militar; pero como es un tema del que se hablará mañana, no voy a entrar en él. <BRK>

Nahtigal (Gouv.-SI). - Mr President, the area of CFSP should be tackled with a great deal of caution and hasty decisions should be avoided.

One could agree with the statement that the external relations of the EU do not correspond to its economic power.

It is therefore right that the CFSP is discussed separately by the Convention. It is crucial to reduce this gap - the gap between the economic and foreign affairs aspect. When seeking to strengthen the role of the EU in foreign affairs, a cautious approach should be taken and we should resist the temptation to strengthen this aspect of political integration forcefully and at any cost.

413 It is a fact that it took 50 years to introduce a common currency, that is monetary union. In this period the Coal and Steel Community gradually deepened. It has been 414 only 10 years since the Common Foreign and Security Policy was put in place and only three years since the inception of European Security and Defence Policy.
 415 On the other hand, the problem of the efficiency of the CFSP has nothing to do with 416 the forthcoming enlargement of the EU. As stressed by Jacques Delors, European 417 foreign policy will be no more difficult with 27 Members than is it now with the present 15 Members - do not look for excuses, it is not the enlargement which will cause obstacles.
 418 In addition, I would like to note that the six-month rotation of the EU presidency itself does not represent an obstacle to a more efficient CFSP.
 419 The problem arising from frequent changes of the presidency can be overcome by adopting longer-term working programmes, binding on several consecutive presidencies. In this way, we could provide for the continuity of EU functioning in foreign policy, without marginalising the role of small Member States.
 420 A good example of that is the recent decision of the Seville Council to reorganise the GAC General Affairs Council and separate its agendas and sessions horizontally and by foreign policy issue of the EU.
 421 The urgently needed strengthening of the foreign policy image of the EU can be attained also through enhanced cooperation between the Council and the Commission - especially through closer linkage between different aspects of EU external action - I mean trade, development, foreign policy and other aspects. The High Representative could play an important role in this linkage.
 422 In this way, we could overcome the rigidity of the present Three Pillar structure. The actions of the High Representative so far have fully met initial expectations.
 423 Therefore, we see this office as having the greatest potential for even greater coordination between various fields of EU foreign affairs.
 425 In the present circumstances, it is unlikely that the principle of unanimity in the CFSP will be abolished. The method of enhanced cooperation gives additional opportunity to improve the efficiency of the CFSP. This is, however, limited to special cases, when not all of the Member States are willing to participate in certain activities of the CFSP and ESDP, but do not oppose these activities either. Of course, in these cases they should be given every opportunity to join at a later stage under the same conditions.
 426 Our goal remains to hear the EU speaking with a single voice at the global level in the nearest possible future. In order to reach this goal, we have to find a way which will lead to the organic development of common institutions, while at the same time paying the utmost attention to the differences between Member States and their interests. <BRK>

Lequiller (Parl.-FR). - Monsieur le Président, je voudrais d'abord partir d'un constat que j'ai fait lors d'un de mes séjours à l'ONU auprès de la délégation française, lorsque la France présidait l'Union européenne, avec M. l'Ambassadeur qui était sur place. Il me faisait remarquer que 95 % des résolutions et décisions qui sont prises par l'Europe à l'ONU le sont à l'unanimité. Le problème, ce sont les 5 % sur lesquels l'Europe se divise. Ce sont souvent les décisions les plus importantes et sur lesquelles les États-Unis ne sont pas d'accord. Je crois donc nous devons faire en sorte que l'Europe soit toujours unie. Si elle est d'accord avec les États-Unis, tant mieux, mais sur certains sujets elle doit pouvoir adopter une position autonome et unie. Je crois qu'il n'y a pas d'opposition entre les petits et les grands pays, entre ceux qui sont plus ou moins fédéralistes. En effet, nous sommes arrivés, selon moi, à une conception en commun de la fédération d'États-nations. Ainsi, au-delà des problèmes déontologiques, l'objectif doit être le pragmatisme.

Je proposerais donc de mettre à l'ordre du jour l'idée suivante : la décision de proposer ensemble, chaque année, une déclaration de politique générale en matière d'affaires étrangères sur laquelle pourraient se prononcer les trois organes (Conseil des Ministres, Commission et Parlement européen) en fonction de leurs responsabilités effectives et actuelles. Cette déclaration de politique générale en matière d'affaires étrangères pourrait évoluer progressivement vers un 427 rapprochement de ces positions.

427 Je crois que l'Union a fait énormément de progrès dans le domaine de la politique étrangère, notamment suite au conflit majeur des Balkans, avec la création du Haut représentant pour la PESC, mais nous devons aussi fournir un effort cohérent en matière de défense. Je le mentionne parce que le gouvernement français a l'intention de remonter progressivement les efforts de défense de la France, de façon à atteindre l'objectif de 2,5 % du PIB, non atteint actuellement. Les pays désireux d'entrer dans cette politique étrangère et de sécurité commune devraient consentir des efforts parallèles.

429 Dans le domaine de l'industrie d'armement, il faut, selon moi, une coopération et, parfois, une complémentarité. En effet, certains pays ont chacun leurs spécialités, et il est un peu dommage que nous nous fassions concurrence, entre nous, au sein de l'Europe. Alors notre collaboration pourrait être beaucoup plus intelligente et 430 beaucoup plus forte. Il me semble donc très important que nous ayons une 431 coopération avec les États-Unis au sein de l'OTAN, dans un respect mutuel et que 432 nous sachions non pas être indépendants mais autonomes quant il s'agit d'intervenir 433 sur le théâtre européen mais parfois aussi à l'extérieur. Il va de soi que chaque État a sa souveraineté mais je crois qu'autour de cet objectif de déclaration commune de politique étrangère, de renforcement de la PESC, de coopération en matière 435 industrielle, nous pouvons avancer, après l'euro, vers un nouvel objectif qui doit être défini, lui aussi, avec pragmatisme et sans opposition.

436 Je crois beaucoup à la démocratie parlementaire. Je souhaiterais voir, au poste auquel je viens d'être élu, se développer cette diplomatie parlementaire entre les parlements et le Parlement européen afin de voir de quelle façon nous pouvons donner un visage à l'Europe. Ce visage est très important, non seulement par rapport à l'extérieur mais par rapport aux citoyens qui, selon moi, ont besoin de savoir qui est leur président.
Nous devons y réfléchir. <BRK>

Fini (Ch.E/G.-IT). - Signor Presidente, tranne rarissime eccezioni, siamo davvero quasi tutti d'accordo, almeno qui nell'ambito della Convenzione, circa la necessità di avere più Europa nelle relazioni internazionali, ma credo che sia un errore pensare che l'efficienza della PESC dipenda unicamente dalla qualità dell'architettura istituzionale che vogliamo disegnare.

Ricordava giustamente il collega Muñoz poc'anzi che è sempre innanzitutto un problema di volontà politica: volontà politica degli Stati e, ovviamente, dei popoli europei.

Io voglio dare per scontato che ci sia in questa fase storica, soprattutto dopo l'11 settembre, come l'Eurobarometro fotografa, una precisa volontà politica dei popoli e degli Stati per un maggior protagonismo e una maggiore unitarietà dell'Europa in politica internazionale, e allora è giusto chiedersi, come stiamo facendo, con quali istituzioni.

Al riguardo voglio intervenire nel dibattito avanzando qualche proposta. Penso innanzitutto che, per garantire una maggior tempestività ed efficienza dell'azione della PESC, senza per questo alterare quell'equilibrio tra l'ambito comunitario e l'ambito intergovernativo che rappresenta certamente uno dei valori che la Convenzione deve saper difendere, perché non immaginare l'unione delle funzioni dell'Alto rappresentante e del Commissario per le relazioni esterne? La personalità prescelta dovrebbe godere, oltre che del controllo delle risorse, come già è stato detto, anche di un potere d'iniziativa nella PESC. Non penso ad un potere che sia esclusivo; penso ad un potere che sia comunque condiviso con gli Stati membri. In questa unità delle funzioni tra l'Alto rappresentante e il Commissario per le relazioni esterne, noi garantiremo un ruolo di rappresentanza esterna all'Unione che dovrebbe essere potenziato con una forma giuridica precisa e chiara per un unico soggetto istituzionale: in buona sostanza, colui che agisce in nome e per conto dell'Unione.

.....
Ulteriore considerazione: uno strumento indispensabile da attivare per garantire una maggiore efficacia della PESC, soprattutto in un'Europa più larga, in un'Europa riunificata e allargata, è, a mio modo di vedere, quello della flessibilità. La storia recente ci ha dimostrato che non tutti gli Stati vorranno o potranno prendersi cura di situazioni che si verificano in paesi terzi, in paesi lontani e in cui non hanno interessi diretti. Ma se la politica estera non deve essere il minimo comun denominatore delle politiche nazionali, ma qualche cosa di più, allora credo che occorrerà ammettere che l'attuazione delle politiche, decise dall'Unione nel suo complesso, possa essere rimessa anche ad un gruppo di Stati, non necessariamente a tutti gli Stati.

439

440
442

Un'ultima considerazione relativa al bilancio, questione su cui credo che davvero non si possano avere posizioni diverse rispetto a quelle che già sono state ampiamente espresse. Noi dobbiamo fare in modo che i paesi membri concorrono in misura sostanziale ad un adeguamento dello sforzo economico finanziario comune. Questo deve accadere nel rispetto dei parametri legislativi di spesa disciplinati dai singoli Stati, ma anche garantendo un'efficace opera di vigilanza e di controllo da parte dei parlamenti nazionali. Nella scorsa sessione, signor Presidente, parlammo del ruolo dei parlamenti nazionali: su questa materia il ruolo credo che sia essenziale. Agendo lungo queste linee, credo che si possa garantire la piena applicazione dell'articolo 19 del Trattato sull'Unione e quindi anche garantire, com'è nell'auspicio di tutti, che l'Europa parli ad una voce e sia più protagonista in politica estera.

Yilmaz, Ayfer (Parl.-TR). - Mr President, at this stage of the debate I will not repeat what has already been said about the need and merits of having a strong common foreign and security policy which is a must if we are to have 'more Europe'. I will concentrate more on the economic dimension of the Union's external relations. Globalisation is the key aspect of the 21st century. Beside the positive spillover effects, we must consider the possible negative effects of uncoordinated decision making. It is important to develop a common European position in order to meet the expectations for a strong presence in the international methods related to crisis management and conflict prevention with financial and economic impacts.

The Union must have a common, coherent, comprehensive and unique approach in its external relations with the rest of the world. The Union must speak with one voice which is based on shared values and common interests. Concerning the conduct of external economic relations, either at the multilateral or bilateral level, the Union should continue to use its exclusive competence in favour of common and balanced interests. By taking into account the expectations of the citizens, the complexity of economics in general, its social dimension and its effects in different areas on prosperity, the competence of the Community should be widened to cover more areas, particularly all aspects of trade in those goods and services which directly affect the life standards and the potential benefits of the European citizens. It is obvious that the notion of the single market, which has external as well as dimensions the internal ones, itself clearly implies that foreign economic relations should be handled by a single authority.

On the other hand, in the ongoing globalisation process, which day by day forces all economic operators to take a large number of changing and developing conditions into consideration, the Union should give priority to the development of existing modalities with a view to satisfying the real needs of the Member States in a more balanced way. Each sector will differ in importance depending on the Member State and thus none should be scarified or ignored in favour of others.

Strategic administration at Community level, and more active participation of the Member States in pre-decision making procedures should be reviewed and strengthened. Measures should be previously prepared to manage any crisis which may be faced by all or some Member States in the future. Internal structures should not be allowed to diversify in such a way that they spoil the integrity of the process. We are very pleased that another aspect of external relations, the development policy, has been included in the Convention's agenda. Development cooperation and assistance is of vital importance to the billions of people living in every corner of the globe. Therefore should constitute one of the most significant dimensions of the Union's external relations. It should be handled with ultimate care and effectiveness since it is not only a matter of humanity but also an investment for the future prosperity of Europe. <BRK>

455 Lamassoure (PE). - Je vous remercie, Monsieur le Président. Désormais, nous avons la monnaie du 21ème siècle mais, curieusement, nos politiques étrangères et nos dispositifs militaires restent prisonniers du monde des années cinquante et soixante.

456 En témoignent trois questions, sur des sujets tabous au demeurant, que nous pose l'homme de la rue. Première question: à quoi servent nos ambassades bilatérales ? Je citerai en exemple l'Ambassade de France à Madrid, chère à Ana Palacio, celle de Belgique à La Haye. Un ministre français qui ne connaît pas personnellement son homologue allemand est un mauvais ministre, cher Gunter Pleuger. Les relations entre nous ne revêtent plus un caractère diplomatique mais un caractère communautaire.

457 Deuxième question : À quoi jouons-nous à l'ONU ? Pierre Lequiller parlait de l'ONU tout à l'heure. Nous nous y comportons comme si le monde et notre propre continent n'avaient pas changé depuis 1960. Comment pouvons-nous justifier, au 21ème siècle, la représentation des pays européens au Conseil de Sécurité de l'ONU ? Sujet tabou. Et comme nous ne voulons rien changer à cette représentation, nous refusons par exemple l'accès à l'Inde, pays démocratique, deux fois et demi plus peuplé que la grande Europe ici représentée. En d'autres termes, à l'ONU, nous défendons un statu quo où, en pratique, l'Inde est toujours une colonie, l'Allemagne est toujours un pays vaincu et coupable, et l'Union européenne n'existe pas. Il ne nous vient même pas à l'esprit de traduire, dans l'enceinte de l'ONU, ce que nous avons ensemble fait de plus positif pour la paix du monde, depuis 50 ans, à savoir la décolonisation et la construction d'une Europe unie.

458 459 460 461 462 463 Troisième question : la défense. On dit, à juste titre, que c'est le coeur des souverainetés nationales. Pourquoi n'acceptons-nous pas simplement d'accorder à l'Union européenne les transferts de souveraineté que beaucoup d'entre nous ont accordés à l'OTAN, pendant et après la guerre froide ? Aurions-nous moins confiance en nos voisins européens qu'en la lointaine Amérique ? Parmi nous, qui a encore peur de qui ? Ayons le courage de nous le demander et de le dire. Achevons de tuer les fantômes du passé afin de pouvoir, enfin, affronter les défis de notre temps. Pour y parvenir, proposons une démarche progressive en nous inspirant de celle qui a si bien réussi pour l'Union monétaire. Nous pourrions par exemple mettre en place trois étapes, échelonnées sur une période de 10 à 12 ans, qui nous permettraient de réunir les conditions politiques et de consolider entre nous l'indispensable confiance.

La première étape serait celle de la séparation du diplomatique et du communautaire. La seconde serait celle de l'harmonisation des politiques nationales et la troisième serait celle de la véritable politique commune. C'est sans doute un domaine où notre Convention devra proposer, non pas un cadre figé, mais le lancement d'un nouveau processus. <BRK>

MacLennan of Rogart (Parl.-GB). - Mr President, yesterday at the Youth Convention you held out the prospect that we are entering the third age of the European Union. The achievement of the first age was 50 years of peace within our frontiers. The second age is that of liberation and the reunification of our continent. The third is the age when Europe may choose to reach beyond its borders to advance the achievement of citizenship of a global society.

In a dangerous world, external action is necessary to safeguard what we have achieved for ourselves in the first two ages of European Union. But self-defence is not enough. Europe must aspire, in its third age, to share its growing good fortune. This is not an imperialist vision. It is a willingness to be a leading partner within a developing world community. This is a community to be enriched by the husbanding of its natural resources; a community to be protected from the violation of fundamental human rights; a community to be safeguarded from the rapacity and cruelty of the mighty by the extension of the rule of law; a community in which globalisation does not signify heartless exploitation or the uncontrolled belittling of

464 our diverse cultures and beliefs but rather, the ever wider spread of enlightenment and opportunity.

465 We have to ask ourselves the question in this Convention: do we have the strength, the will and the means to do it? Certainly we have the economic resources to let us choose to be effective. Do we have the will? The signals in this year of international lawlessness are mixed. The scale of American power and willingness to go it alone has not yet evoked a bell-like clarity of response from Europe, but the need for a strong and independent-minded partner for the United States, founded on democracy and the rule of law, must be met. A mere declaration of intent by Europe without the means to deliver coherent, agreed and effective common foreign and security policies would stand, like the Locarno Pact, as a mockery of good intentions.

466 In the sphere of foreign and security policy, capability must match aspiration.
However well-intentioned, the recent visit of the High Representative to Jerusalem 467 only advertised how ill-prepared was Europe for a role in the Middle East. Common 468 policies cannot be plucked from the air in rapid reaction to crisis. Agreeing the 469 mandates and the means for their delivery requires painstaking continuing 470 application by dedicated public servants, not just a publicised dash around the 471 capitals of Europe.

472 It is more important to secure that professionalism than to decide whether it should be located in the Council, the Commission or both. The Council must provide 473 sustained leadership but mere concertation of foreign policy by heads of government is not enough. Nineteenth century Europe tried that at the Congress of Berlin and in the so-called 'Concert of Europe'. It failed spectacularly. The very different prospects 474 for Europe today require us to build upon the three great institutions of the Union, to adapt them further, certainly, but to use them all for their inherent strengths in fashioning for Europe a beneficent role in the new, wider world community.

475 (Applause) <BRK>

Zile (Gouv.-LV). - Mr. President, the Convention's ability to create new instruments in EU external policy and to improve existing ones should be one of the most clear results that the Convention can achieve within its mandate. EU external policy is an area that can bring the European Union closer to a wider public, promoting at the same time the EU's role on the international stage.

I would like to start with the EU's external trade policy. This area, being the exclusive competence of the Community, is usually considered to be relatively effective. The Community approach safeguards the interests of each EU Member State, finding the best compromise to satisfy both small and large Member States.
But what about other EU external policy areas - are they as positive?

The EU's external policy activities have resulted in the creation of the post of CFSP
High Representative. However, every half year, the representatives of EU institutions organise and participate in about 200 events involving political dialogue in which the EU presidency plays a significant role. However, each new presidency starts its activities with a completely different vision and different priorities. By assessing the EU's activities, one could conclude that the time and resources invested far outweigh the benefits gained. Is the European Union satisfied with the results achieved?

What I just said shows the advantages and disadvantages of the two different approaches. It clearly shows the achievements of the Community approach and the limitations of the intergovernmental approach in reaching results on external action.
That is why we would suggest that the effectiveness of EU external policy can be improved only where all EU external policies and trade instruments are used in a systematic and structured way.

Political dialogue should be closely linked to EU development policy and the common refugee and asylum policy. EU external policy activity should be flexible and should ensure faster decision-making. The current system should be reformed because, at present, decision-making is a Council competence, whilst implementation is a Commission competence.

There is no doubt that the external dimension of the EU should also include such areas as the environment, justice and home affairs and illegal migration. At the same time, we must simplify the complicated legal basis.

477 Finally, it is too early to speak about creating a common defence system within the 478 EU. However, there is no doubt that we should further develop the EU's capacity to 479 prevent military or civilian crises and provide crisis management. The EU's security 480 and military activities currently come under the scope of the Petersberg tasks.
 481 <BRK>

485 Duff (PE). - Mr President, clearly there is some broad agreement that the competence of the Union should grow in the field of foreign security and defence 486 policy.

487 But it is more important, therefore, to appreciate that the present treaty system fails.
 It fails on the grounds of clarity, consistency, democracy and cost-effectiveness. It fails to nurture mutual trust among Member States and it fails to develop the Union 488 as an assured performer on the world stage.

489 Therefore, just to want more of the same system is not the answer. It is vital to 490 reform the decision-making process because Europe cannot speak with one voice, 491 should it fail to agree on what to say.

492 I believe that, ultimately, we will see the cloning, perhaps, of Mr Patten and Mr Solana, but much better synergy between the Commission and the Council can be created in the meantime.

488 By all means grant Mr Solana the right of initiative, but why not insist that in cases where Mr Solana and Mr Patten can agree to table a joint proposal, the Council should act by qualified majority. That would bring more of the Community method into the common foreign and security policy and break down the barriers of theology which too often impede rational political thought.

493 QMV in foreign policy will bring about more expediency and more compulsion - leading to greater achievement - and is absolutely essential in a Union of 25 or more Member States. <BRK>

Augerinos:

Mr. President, we are observing all the indicators of the Eurobarometer in which the demand of the European citizens for a more extensive presence of the Union in the international arena and for a more effective presence in the administration of international crises, are being recorded.

There are three sectors for potential external action for the EU: foreign economic relations, foreign policy, and defense & security policy. In my belief, Mr. President, all three of these sectors interact with and affect one another, and for that reason they should consist of one solid framework, so that the Union will be better able to operate with effectiveness and coherence in its foreign relations. The foreign relations schema of the EU in operation at the moment is difficult to define, ineffective and dissatisfying. This became obvious during the operations in the Balkans, which proved out difficult to administer, but also in its apparent incapacity to play a leading role in the Middle-East. That is why there exists such a need to examine the gradual merger of the second pillar to the first pillar, and to communalize foreign policy at the Union level. Proof of the unsuitability of the structure of the pillars of the Union is the fact that the representation of the Union abroad is today realized by the Presidency, the High Representative for Foreign Policy and the designated commissioner for Foreign Affairs.

That sort of division can only lead to a conflict of responsibilities and foster confusion among European Citizens but also among the international partners of the Union. That is why the Union should be expressed abroad through one forceful voice and presence. The responsibilities of the High Representative should be gradually incorporated with those of the responsible Commissioner. Additionally, the position of vice-president of Committee for foreign relations and the Common Foreign and Defence Policy needs to be constituted, who will of course be subject to the Council and the European Parliament. For the European Union to play a leading role in the international political arena it should possess the essential means but it should also not lack the right decision-making mechanisms. The system of unanimity that is in effect today impedes the work of Union and it delays the decision-making process so that the Union cannot respond to situations which require swift reactions. The wider use of the majority rule (instead of unanimity) is a necessary condition for a more effective achievement of the objectives of the Union in the foreign policy arena.

Finally, a unified Defence Policy should constitute an integral part of the foreign policy planning of the Union. The European Union should gradually pass from a Crisis Management System to a system of collective safety. In what concerns the member states which will not prove to be able to follow this effort, this shouldn't prevent those member states that will wish to advance. This of course assumes a certain level of willingness to promote an even more strengthened collaboration in the subject of defence.

Dini (Parl.-IT). - Signor Presidente, nel contributo che ho reso disponibile ai membri della Convenzione ho illustrato le premesse, le ragioni geopolitiche che richiedono di dotare l'Unione europea degli strumenti necessari a condurre una credibile politica estera di sicurezza e difesa. E' appunto il compito della Convenzione - il nostro compito - saper raccogliere con coerenza gli insegnamenti imposti dalla necessità e identificare, sul piano delle istituzioni, i punti sui quali l'Unione deve innovare rispetto ai Trattati esistenti.

Chiarezza ed autorevolezza potranno aumentare, riducendo - come da lei auspicato, signor Presidente - il numero delle voci incaricate di far sentire le posizioni dell'Unione. L'ipotesi di fondere in una stessa persona, anche se con ruoli e mandati diversi, l'attuale Alto rappresentante e il Commissario, ed eventuale Vicepresidente della Commissione, responsabile per le relazioni esterne, potrebbe contribuire a tali chiarezza e autorevolezza. Non si tratterebbe di comunitarizzare la politica estera - un passo per ora troppo audace - bensì di riunire nella stessa persona due mandati distinti: l'uno proveniente dalla Commissione, l'altro dal Consiglio, per quanto riguarda le materie di competenza di quest'ultimo. Non ritengo pertanto né pratico né sufficiente quanto detto al riguardo dal collega Peter Hain, cioè che i due personaggi potrebbero presentare proposte concordate. Sono invece d'accordo con quanto detto dall'onorevole Brok all'inizio della nostra riunione, dall'onorevole Glotz e anche dal rappresentante del governo italiano, l'onorevole Fini.

Hain (Ch.E/G.-GB). - Mr President, we all agree that we need a serious foreign policy. We all agree that vital reforms are needed, and nobody is defending the status quo. That is agreed between us.

As Mr Christophersen asked earlier: how do we stop four voices speaking to the US instead of one European voice? If you want a common voice from Europe, it has to have the confidence of heads of government. If you do not have the confidence of the heads of government, you will not get a common voice. That is the brutal truth. That is why Mr Solana, apart from his own abilities, has been so successful, because he is the High Representative of the Council.

Mr Avgerinos asked about qualified majority voting. I see potential advantages in making more use of qualified majority voting for implementing the CFSP. It would reduce the scope for individual nations blocking progress, but I cannot see it for policy decisions. I doubt that QMV would be either realistic or good for cohesion. If QMV were applied to all European policy decisions, it might make more public where the divisions are and therefore weaken Europe's external voice. Those are my concerns, but I am not shutting the door on it.

I was interested in the comments made by Mr Dini and others on the double-hatting of the Commissioner for External Relations and the High Representative. My question - and those that want to merge them have to answer it - is to which body would that individual answer and be accountable: the Council or the Commission? Who is the master? That is the question. Can you have two bosses? Mr Duff's proposal for QMV where Mr Solana and Mr Patten have a joint proposal is an interesting one, but does that imply codecision with the European Parliament. Would this be possible? That is my question to him. <BRK>

Barnier (CE). - Monsieur le Président, comme tout le monde ici, je trouve que le débat progresse de manière très intéressante et de manière non idéologique. Alain Lamassoure, tout à l'heure, a plaidé pour la progressivité. Il a employé le mot de "processus". Je m'inscris dans cette idée que nous devons avoir une perspective, car nous savons bien que nous ne modifierons pas fondamentalement les traités aussi facilement que cela après 2004 ou 2005. Il est donc temps d'avoir une vision sur 20 ou 30 ans, comme cela a été le cas dans les années 50, et de prévoir, dans le cadre de cette vision, des étapes. Voilà pourquoi également la question du "Monsieur PESC", que je connais assez bien pour avoir été l'un des négociateurs du traité d'Amsterdam. A l'époque, si nous avions voulu mettre le "Monsieur PESC" dans la Commission, nous ne l'aurions mis nulle part. C'était absolument impossible d'imaginer qu'il soit autrement qu'aux côtés du Conseil et qu'ainsi il fasse ses preuves, comme M. Solana a fait les siennes. Je suis sûr d'une chose, en ayant ce souvenir, c'est que l'heure arrive où, pour la voix de l'Europe, pour la force de cette voix, il devient nécessaire de fusionner les énergies et, notamment, de mettre dans la même main la capacité d'initiative. Peut-être cela se fera-t-il par étapes, comme je l'ai dit tout à l'heure, sans renoncer en quoi que ce soit à la vision finale. Par étapes: il faudra donc peut-être en tout premier lieu doter "Monsieur PESC" du droit d'initiative. Imaginer, comme Andrew Duff l'a dit, que, lorsque la possibilité se présente d'une initiative commune du commissaire et du Haut représentant, la majorité qualifiée soit utilisée au Conseil. C'est pour cette raison que je dis que le débat progresse de manière intéressante. Je suis sûr qu'on peut, lors de l'étape suivante, fusionner les deux postes et, néanmoins - je le dis à Peter Hain - prévoir, pour élaborer l'initiative, de la part de cet homme qui aura une double casquette, prévoir des modalités particulières pour élaborer l'initiative, lesquelles rassureront les ministres. On peut prévoir de telles modalités, et c'est ce à quoi nous devons travailler dans les mois qui viennent. <BRK>

Tilikainen (Ch.E/G.-FI). - Mr President, many people here have argued that the European Union should be able to speak to a greater extent with one voice. I agree with Mr Duff that it is not just the number of voices that matters, but whether the Union has anything to say with its voice. I see that the real challenges at the moment are connected to the formulation of a cohesive and consistent policy to be implemented with those instruments that have recently been created for the European Union. First, as I see it, it is a question of the formulation of the EU's political interests. In order to become a credible international actor, the European Union must be provided with a much clearer formulation of its international policy and interests. It must be able to turn its basic values - those, for instance, expressed in Article 6, as well as the starting-points for the common foreign and security policy - into a more concrete policy formulation, in terms of both the geographical and ideological goals of this policy. In present Second Pillar matters, the European Union's policy is excessively ad hoc in character. Consistency, even in the historical sense, is a precondition for credibility. Better formulation of the common policy must also result in increased loyalty to the common foreign and security policy on the part of the Member States. The EU's lack of proper institutional machinery, both in the planning and articulation of its external position and interests, is the main cause for the defective formulation of a consistent external policy. The Union needs machinery that is capable of dealing with the international environment from the perspective of the EU as a collective actor. The EU currently lacks machinery that would guarantee both coherence and continuity in its external relations.

It is evident that the legal and institutional division of the EU's external relations into two pillars must be dismantled as a condition for the creation of a coherent policy. The Commission must be made the key actor in the analysis and planning of the EU's external policy, as well as in its representation. Member States retain their position as key decision-makers, but the role of the Commission guarantees that the common perspective and political consistency will shape the result. Majority decisions must be made the rule in an enlarged Union, with the exception of defence. A more cohesive policy formulation must also contribute to the Union's interests being communicated more firmly and coherently to the international audience. The EU must strengthen and coordinate its representation in international organisations. It must also have a clearer profile as regards those individuals representing the EU in international fora. Giving the mandate of external representation to the Commission would contribute to the coherence of this policy area, both inside and outside the Union.

To conclude, the European Union does not lack international capacities. The problem is how to put these capacities to more efficient use. To start thinking more in terms of common EU interests, including in the field of external relations, is a basic condition. This cannot be done as long as the field is divided both in institutional terms at EU level and in terms of historical and geographical interests at the Member State level. <BRK>

Meyer (Parl.-DE). - Herr Präsident! Sie haben uns und auch den Jugendkonvent mehrfach aufgefordert, mutig zu sein, Visionen zu entwickeln und auch Europa zu träumen. Deshalb will ich an den Satz erinnern, mit dem der amtierende deutsche Außenminister, Joschka Fischer, sein Amt angetreten hat - er hat erklärt, er wolle daran arbeiten, sein Amt als nationaler Außenminister überflüssig zu machen. Nun, ist das sicher eine Vision, die weit vorausseilt. Aber in der Politik kommt es ja häufig darauf an, dass auch kleinere Schritte in die richtige Richtung weisen. Deshalb verdient nach meiner Überzeugung der Vorschlag der Personalunion zwischen den Ämtern von Solana und Patten, wie ihn auch meine Kollegen Peter Glotz und Elmar Brok vorgestellt haben, nachhaltige Unterstützung.

Die Menschen, für die wir hier arbeiten, erwarten, dass Europa in Krisen, die die Welt erschüttern, wie etwa im Nahen Osten, mit einer Stimme spricht. Sie erwarten das auch bei der Bekämpfung des Terrorismus, und ich hoffe, dass das so bleibt, wenn es um die Forderung nach dem internationalen Strafgerichtshof geht, einer ganz wichtigen Forderung nicht nur Europas, sondern vieler anderer Länder. Aber wenn man dieses fordert und auf der anderen Seite auf Souveränität pocht, dann sollte man doch bitte bedenken, dass es zum einen bei den Beispielen, die ich genannt habe, immer auch um europäische Interessen geht, und zum anderen muss man sich doch wenigstens fragen, ob eine wirkungsvolle Durchsetzung nationaler Interessen tatsächlich aussichtsreich ist, wenn man alleine auftritt, statt mit einer europäischen Stimme und entsprechender Unterstützung zu sprechen. Im deutschen Bundestag, das wird niemanden überraschen, treten wir ein für eine schrittweise Vergemeinschaftung der gemeinsamen Außenpolitik, wie sie unter anderem der Kollege Lamassoure eben skizziert hat. Wir sind für die parlamentarische Kontrolle einer integrierten gemeinsamen Außenpolitik, die vom Europäischen Parlament wahrgenommen werden soll. So lange und so weit der intergouvernementale Charakter der Außenpolitik fortbesteht, bedarf diese der Kontrolle durch die 545 nationalen Parlamente in Zusammenarbeit mit dem Europäischen Parlament.

 Etwas besonderes, da hatte die Kollegin Gisela Stuart eben völlig recht, gilt aus unserer Sicht für militärische Einsätze, bei denen nationales Verfassungsrecht zu beachten ist. Deshalb sagen wir, europäische Außenpolitik sollte künftig im Rat mehrheitlich entschieden werden können. Bei Militäreinsätzen wird es immer, wie 546 Kollege Brok das formuliert hat, um eine coalition of the willing gehen. Wir sind für eine Verbesserung der gemeinsamen Außenvertretung der Europäischen Union durch ein europäisches diplomatisches Corps. In dem Zusammenhang sind wir für den ganz praktischen Vorschlag einer Intensivierung des Personalaustauschs zwischen Mitgliedstaaten und den für die GASP zuständigen EU-Strukturen im Rat und der Kommission.

547 Eine letzte Bemerkung zu der Frage 2, die uns das Präsidium vorgelegt hat, nämlich
 548 zu der Frage der Entwicklung von Gemeinsamkeiten und der Abstimmung in der 549 Entwicklungspolitik. Der deutsche Bundestag ist für eine stärkere Verzahnung aller 550 für die zivile Krisenprävention notwendigen Politikbereiche, also neben der Außen-, der Entwicklungs-, der Finanz- und der Migrationspolitik. Wir meinen, dass das eben nur europäisch geleistet werden kann, durch europäische Planungskonzepte unter Einbeziehung der Kommission und des Europäischen Parlaments. Mich hat eben sehr gefreut, dass die Kollegin Tiilikainen, meine Vorrednerin, auch davon gesprochen hat, dass wir Grundwerte haben, die wir auch nach außen offensiv vertreten sollten.
 Wir bekennen uns in der Grundrechtecharta zur Solidarität. Das hat ja auch, wie wir wissen, mit Entwicklungspolitik zu tun. Deshalb sage ich, es ist schön, wenn wir in der wirtschaftlichen Außenvertretung dafür sorgen, dass wir zum Beispiel Autos exportieren. Aber wir sollten uns auch gemeinsam darum bemühen, unsere 551 europäische Werteordnung zu exportieren. <BRK>

Muscardini (PE). - Signor Presidente, nel titolo V del Trattato sull'Unione europea sono definiti gli obiettivi della politica estera e di sicurezza comune, per realizzare i quali sono stati creati strumenti quali l'azione e la posizione comune. In seguito, la figura di Alto rappresentante della PESC ha rafforzato il coordinamento della politica estera dell'Unione nella gestione delle crisi. Non sempre, tuttavia e purtroppo, l'Unione è stata in grado di affrontare, tempestivamente e unitariamente, le vicende internazionali. Oggi, la politica estera dell'Unione deve essere più tempestiva e visibile ed essere conosciuta all'esterno anche dai media, dalle organizzazioni internazionali, dal cittadino comune.

Per soddisfare questa esigenza occorre, oltre ad una redifinizione dei ruoli dell'Alto rappresentante, che vi sia anche un'espressione univoca della volontà politica dei governi per assumere posizioni di volta in volta rispondenti agli interessi generali dell'Europa e quindi anche dei singoli Stati. Anche le questioni della solidarietà internazionale e della difesa della pace sono maggiormente garantite da strategie comuni, piuttosto che da singole decisioni nazionali. Le capacità diplomatiche, analitiche e rappresentative degli Stati membri devono essere utilizzate continuativamente anche attraverso l'uso delle tecnologie più avanzate, affinché l'Unione possa assumere iniziative immediate in caso di crisi. Devono perciò essere anche utilizzate le competenze specifiche e le tradizioni storiche delle diplomazie dei singoli Stati nazionali, che dovrebbero sfociare sinteticamente nella cellula di programmazione politica e tempestivo allarme che è stata istituita in base ad una dichiarazione allegata al Trattato di Amsterdam.

La convergenza e l'unificazione della PESC e delle politiche esterne diviene una necessità. Il frazionamento dei comportamenti non giova alla credibilità dell'Unione.
 Per queste ragioni riteniamo degno di particolare attenzione l'incremento dell'utilizzo dello strumento delle strategie comuni. Riconosciamo la necessità del rispetto della sovranità nazionale ma ci rendiamo conto che, su questi temi, una formula che modifichi il diritto di voto debba essere trovata con un voto a maggioranza, per snellire la procedura ed evitare un blackout che paralizzerebbe l'azione dell'Unione nella politica estera. Per questo motivo dovrà essere data massima attenzione alla ricerca del punto di equilibrio tra il rispetto della sovranità nazionale e il rispetto dell'interesse collettivo dell'Unione, tenuto altresì conto che tra le missioni dell'Unione, delle quali abbiamo parlato nella prima seduta, vi sono anche e

553 soprattutto il garantire la pace e la libertà al di fuori dei propri confini e la lotta al 554 terrorismo. Proprio per dare all'Europa una sola voce, sempre più autorevole, in 555 politica estera e di difesa risulta perciò evidente che il processo di riunificazione
 556 europea deve essere attuato con grande determinazione e tempestività. <BRK>

558 Martikonis (Gouv.-LT). - Mr President, in less than two years the strategic situation of Lithuania will be changed profoundly. In several months Lithuania will become a Member of the European Union and Nato, thus arriving at a qualitatively new stage of its international life. We have clear views about the complementarity of European Union and North Atlantic Alliance membership in the Baltic states.

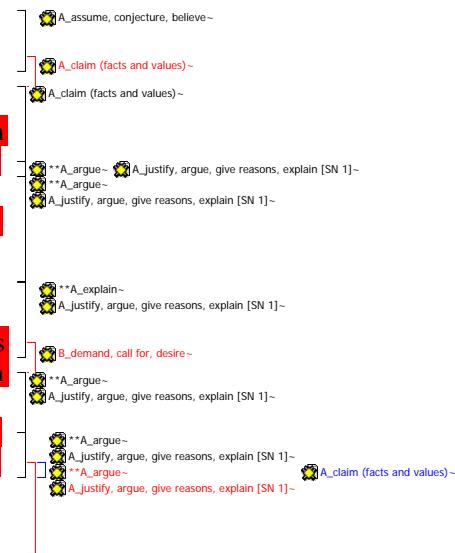

559 My country already sees itself as a good and responsible member of the European and transatlantic community. The task of further developing the Union's external action comes at a time of great domestic introspection about the best ways and means 560 to build Lithuania's foreign policy roles into the greater construction of the European Union.

561 The Praesidium has put good questions to us. The answers will not be quick or easy.
 But let me briefly comment on two points. First, while putting our common interests on the map, I agree with those who argue that the Union's global role starts with neighbourhood or proximity policies, be it in the east, north or south. Talking about what I know best - looking east - it is in relations with Russia, Ukraine or even 562 Belarus that the political will, coherence, flexibility and effects of our actions are 563 being and will be tested. The concept of wider Europe should be further elaborated, 564 allowing for individual strategies to be employed for individual partners.

565 Let us think for a second about the situation of the Russian region of Kaliningrad.
 566 This is a matter of cross-border cooperation, energy, environment cooperation, and 567 the movement of people and goods. Lithuania's efforts and expertise in this is 568 already an important piece of regional or should I say European acquis. We have every chance to work with Russia for the success of this pilot project. For that we need properly concerted European Union action.

569 On the mechanics, who is best equipped to act in the interests of Europe? How shall we get to the situation of 'all-for-one and one-for-all'? Polarising the Council and the 570 Commission is wrong. Polarising the High Representative and the Commissioner for 571 External Relations does no good either. We need them both, and together.

572 A number of good suggestions to this end were put forward. This will be achieved by the interaction of the EU institutions. To my mind, the Union's external trade 573 policies are a result of that. They work well. I draw some inspiration along the lines that Commissioner Barnier put. If the Community method in European Union 574 external action sounds unusual to some of us, let us have a hand in reinventing it. For my government, the pragmatic result is important. The end result of this must be that 575 the Union is respected globally and its citizens and countries are proud to be its members. <BRK>

Maij-Weggen (PE). - Mijnheer de voorzitter, het is heel opvallend dat uit alle Eurobarometers van de laatste jaren blijkt dat de Europese burgers een grotere rol van de Europese Unie wensen op het gebied van de buitenlandse politiek.

Vaak is dat zelfs een van de drie belangrijkste wensen van de Europese burgers. En tegelijk is het opvallend dat die rol zoals ze op dit moment wordt uitgeoefend door de Commissie en door de Raad steeds diffuser en steeds onduidelijker is geworden.
 Bij cruciale internationale vraagstukken zien we optredens door en naast elkaar van de Raad, via de Hoge vertegenwoordiger, de heer Solana, van de Commissie, via de heer Prodi en de heer Patten, en dan zien we ook nog nationale ministers van buitenlandse zaken hun bemoeienis tonen, soms individueel, soms via de bekende trojka waardoor er ook nog eens een Europees etiket op wordt geplakt.

Het is dus niet te verbazen dat de burgers geïrrgerd en teleurgesteld raken door dit vertoon en het is minstens even erg dat we in de internationale politiek daardoor onvoldoende serieus worden genomen. Willen we de rol spelen die we zouden moeten spelen dan moeten we, en ik volg hier de heer Brok en vele andere collega's, de rol van de heer Solana op de een of andere manier versmelten met die van de heer Patten. En we moeten de Commissie veel meer ruimte geven om de buitenlandse politiek van de Unie één duidelijk gezicht te geven, én namens de Raad én namens het Europees Parlement.

En dat gezicht moet ook versterkt worden door de opname van de pijler van het GBVB in het communautaire deel van de Verdragen en dat lijkt mij een van de belangrijke taken van onze Conventie te zijn. En ook het Europese defensiebeleid zal opgenomen moeten worden in het communautaire deel van de Verdragen.

De Europese Unie moet naar mijn oordeel een duidelijke Europese poot van de NAVO worden. Dat versterkt onze positie in de buitenlandse politiek ook. Iedereen weet dat je voor een effectieve buitenlandse politiek ook nog eens een stok achter de deur moet hebben.

Voorzitter, nog enkele extra opmerkingen over de externe politiek, want daartoe behoort niet alleen het GBVB, maar ook het terrein van de externe handel en de Europese ontwikkelingshulp. Het externe handelsbeleid is communautair en het is eigenlijk het volste recht van de Commissie om hier op te treden. Maar ernstig genoeg blokkeert de Raad regelmatig het optreden van de Commissie. Een heel berucht voorbeeld is het handelsakkoord met Zuid-Afrika dat vier jaar lang getraineerd heeft om de meest banale en bizarre redenen. De ene keer ging het om de Italiaanse grappa, met alle respect voor de Italiaanse collega's, een andere keer ging het om Portugese port, met alle respect voor de Portugese collega's, en met alle respect voor de voorzitter ging het soms ook om Franse champagne, die kennelijk goed werd nagemaakt door de Zuid-Afrikanen. En ondanks de herhaalde massale steun van het Europees Parlement aan de Commissie ging dat traineren steeds verder. Naar mijn oordeel zou er een voorziening in de Verdragen moeten komen die dit Raadsgedrag voorkomt, want het is buitengewoon schadelijk. Het is ook in de verhouding tot de zuidelijke Afrikaanse landen schadelijk gebleken. Want voorzitter, hoe kun je effectief interveniëren in bijvoorbeeld de Zimbabwe-kwestie als je nog korte tijd daarvoor zo'n ruzie hebt gemaakt met die landen over zulke banale onderwerpen?

En dan, voorzitter, het gebied van de ontwikkelingssamenwerking. Daar is een heel groot probleem van de democratische controle. De financiën van de Europese ontwikkelingssamenwerking, en samen met de lidstaten zijn we de grootste donor in de wereld, vallen niet onder het begrotingscontrolerecht van het Europees Parlement. En ook onze nationale parlementen hebben geen recht of praktijk van toezicht. Wij vinden dat het Europees Parlement volledig toezicht moet krijgen op de financiën in de "European Development Fund" van de ontwikkelingssamenwerking.

En tenslotte, voorzitter, nog een laatste opmerking over de broodnodige afstemming. Een van de zaken die we ook zo snel mogelijk moeten beoordelen, is hoe intern beleid van de Europese Unie, landbouwbeleid, milieubeleid, afgestemd wordt op het Europees buitenlands beleid, want ook daar haakt veel. De tijd is nu te kort om daarop in te gaan, maar ik denk dat we daar in de desbetreffende werkgroep ook nog eens diep over van gedachten moeten wisselen. <BRK>

4-069 Translation

the Netherlands

Maij-Weggen (PE). - Sir the chairman, it's quite striking that all the Eurobarometers of the last few years show that the European citizens want the European Union to play a more important role in international politics.

Often this is even one of the three most important wishes of the European citizens. And at the same time it's striking that this role, as it's being practiced at this moment by the Commission and the Council, becomes more and more vague and unclear. For crucial international problems we see actions of the Council, via the High representative, Mr. Solana, and alongside those of the Commission, via

Mr. Prodi and Mr. Patten; and then you also have the national ministers of foreign affairs meddling, sometimes individually or sometimes via the known troika which has a European label stuck to it as well.

581

Thus it's not a surprise that citizens are getting irritated and disappointed by this show and it is at least just as awful that as a result of this we are not taken seriously in international politics. If we want to play the role we ought to play, and on this I agree with Mr. Brok and many other colleagues, then we must combine together in one way or another the role of Mr. Solana with the role of Mr. Patten. And we must give the Commission more full play on behalf of the Council and the European Parliament for the Union's foreign policy to be more coherent.

This coherency must be strengthened by the insertion of the CFSP pillar in the community part of the Treaties and this is to my opinion one of the important branches of our Convention. The European defence administration will also have to be inserted in the community part of the Treaties.

To my judgement, the European Union should clearly become the European division of NATO. That would also strengthen our position in international politics. Everyone knows that in order to have an effective foreign policy you also need punishments in case of non-respect.

Chairman, still some extra remarks on the external politics, since this not only includes the CFSP, but also external trade and European development aid. The external trade policy is worked out at community level and the Commission perfectly has the right to take action on this matter. But the Council regularly blocks the actions of the Commission, which is a serious matter. A quite notorious example of this is the trade agreement with South-Africa which dragged on for four years for the most banal and bizarre reasons. Once it was about the Italian grappa, with all respect for my Italian colleagues. Another time it was about the Portuguese port, with all respect for my Portuguese colleagues; and with all respect for the chairman, sometimes it was also about the French champagne, which was obviously being well duplicated by the South-Africans. Despite the European Parliament's massive continual support for the Commission it kept dragging on.

To my judgement there must come a provision in the Treaties which prevents this kind of behaviour of the Council, for it is extremely harmful. It has also turned out to be harmful for the southern African countries. Chairman, how can you intervene effectively for instance in the Zimbabwe-issue when not long before you've had a quarrel with those countries over such banal subjects?

Next, chairman, the territory of the development cooperation. There is a very large problem of democratic control. The finances of the European development cooperation, making us the largest donor in the world when combined with those of the member countries, are not subject to the budget control laws of the European Parliament. Furthermore our national parliaments have no right or practice of supervision. We find that the European Parliament should get complete supervision on the finances of the development cooperation's "European Development Fund".

B_demand, call for, desire~

Finally, chairman, just one last remark on this much-needed harmonisation. One of the matters we also have to assess as soon as possible is how internal policy of the European Union, agricultural policy, environmental policy, are brought into line with the European foreign policy, as there are many deficiencies. We don't have enough time now to go further into that matter, but I think that the relevant study group should exchange views thoroughly. <BRK>

Kiljunen (Parl.-FI). - Mr President, the European Union, especially when enlarged, will be clearly the biggest economic entity in the world. This entails global interests but, at the same time, global responsibilities. The European Union has provided a successful model of peace and development based on common democratic values, economic co-operation and social partnership. We are creating sustained security based on cohesion. I think we need to understand and acknowledge this more clearly. The rest of the world shares this same need. We have to build on this in our common foreign policy. Europe must offer its assistance to neighbouring countries and beyond. The challenges of globalisation - from the trade barriers the developing countries face to the HIV endemic and from global warming to trading in small arms - are so huge that the European Union must play an increasingly active role in the building of real global governance.

To support sustainable development worldwide, we need coherent and consistent EU external policies across the board. I welcome the great efforts the Commission and the High Representative have put into this question in the last few years, but there is still a lot of work to be done.

The process towards a closer and stronger foreign policy for the Union calls for a real political will and confidence among the governments and parliaments. Institutional changes, however ambitious and far-reaching, can never replace political will.

In the debate in the first session this afternoon, there seemed to be a contradiction between two different approaches. Some of us argued for a strong national representation in foreign policy, others for a Community approach in this area. There is a compromise to be found. I propose that we achieve a new, combined approach to the common foreign and security policy. This means combining some features of the current intergovernmental reform with the Community method. I recognise the merits of the Community method, but we have to recognise that the common foreign and security policy will inevitably continue to have some intergovernmental characteristics, especially with regard to defence policy. We must combine the Community method and the intergovernmental aspects in a new way. ... thirdly, the actions of the High Representative in the last few years have demonstrated that the need for an EU spokesperson is evident. In order to make the spokesperson stronger, we have to consider whether to merge the Office of High Representative in a new way with the function of the Commission Vice-President, creating a new office of Foreign Affairs Representative. The new office would thus have the twin legitimacy of the agreement of the Member States and the European Parliament. The EU Foreign Affairs Representative should be a member of the Commission, but with special accountability to the Council.

Finally, with regard to the external representation of the Union, the EU should propose common candidates for posts in international organisations. <BRK>

Skaarup (Parl.-DK). - Hr. formand, ingen européens vil dø for EU, men de fleste européens er villige til at dø for deres fædreland. Så simpelt kan spørgsmålet om EU's muligheder for at føre en effektiv sikkerhedspolitik efter min mening stilles op. EU er en konstruktion, som mest er præget af kommercielt samarbejde og bureauratisk management. Det vil og skal ingen dø for.

I spørgsmålet om EU's evner og muligheder for at handle udadtil rører vi ved et centralt aspekt af EU's identitet. Kan EU gøres til en så handlekraftig enhed, at den kan drive sikkerheds- og udenrigspolitik på samme måde som traditionelle nationalstater. Det er spørgsmålet. Erfaringen viser, at det ikke kan lade sig gøre. Det er ikke nok med god vilje og enhedsdrømme. EU mangler den historiske forankring, som karakteriserer nationalstaterne, og derfor får Kissinger nok ikke det telefonnummer, som nogle har været inde på her i dag. Ville Storbritannien f.eks. have kunnet befri Falklandsøerne, hvis EU havde haft en fælles udenrigspolitik? Næppe. EU's miserable indsats i Eks-Jugoslavien skyldes bl.a., at de europæiske stormagter havde historisk betingede forskellige interesser, og måske godt for det. EU kan og skal ikke fornægte historien. Europa er ikke en politisk enhed, og alle hidtidige forsøg på at gøre Europa til en politisk enhed har været ulykkelige og forfærdelige. Europa består af nationer. Nogle er små, nogle er store, men så godt som alle er de forankrede i mere end tusinde års historie, og vi skal snarere anerkende den historie end forsøge at fornægte den eller modarbejde den.

Anerkende, at Europa er nationernes Europa, og så acceptere NATO som Europas vigtigste kilde til sikkerhed. NATO er dannet for at beskytte nationalstaternes selvstændighed. Det er stadig den vigtigste opgave.

EU kan ligesom FN godt tage sig af mange af de blødere sikkerhedsopgaver. Det kan være mægling i konflikter, der kan være katastrofehjælp osv. Men vi skal huske på, at EU ikke nødvendigvis i alle sager er repræsentativ nok. Norge, Island og Schweiz er ikke med, og andre lande har undtagelser eller forbehold over for dele af samarbejdsområderne. Sådan vil det nok fortsat være. F.eks. er der i Danmark nervøsitet ved, at EU-hæren skal blive en konkurrent til NATO. Nogle i EU har det mål med EU-hæren at køre USA ud på et sidespor. Det kan vi efter min opfattelse ikke være med til.

Desuden bør diskussionen af en fælles sikkerheds- og udenrigspolitik ledsages af en diskussion af de mulige trusselscenarier. Hvor kommer truslerne egentlig fra i dagens Europa? Er der overhovedet nogen, der truer os? Jeg tror nok, man kan sige, at terrorismen udgør en af de alvorligste trusler. En anden er de meget store demografiske ændringer, der i øjeblikket ændrer Europa radikalt, og her tror jeg ikke så meget på EU som løsning på sikkerhedsproblemerne, men mere på NATO.

Mr. President, no Europeans want to die for EU, but most Europeans are willing to die for their mother country. That simple can the question about EU's possibilities to perform an efficient security policy, in my opinion be asked. EU is a construction that mostly is characterised of commercial and bureaucratic management. Nobody wants or has to die for that.

In the question if EU's skills and possibilities to handle externally are we touching a central aspect of EU's identity. Can EU be made such an active unit that it can perform security- and foreign politics the same way as traditional national states? That is the question.

Experience show that this cannot be done. It is not enough with only goodwill and dreams of unity. EU is lacking the historical roots that characterises the national states, and therefore does not Kissinger get the phone number that somebody mentioned today. Would for example Great Britain have freed the Falkland Islands if EU had had a common foreign policy? Probably not. EU's miserable effort in ex-Yugoslavia is among others due to that the European great powers had different historical interests, and that is maybe good.

EU cannot and should not deny the history. Europe is not a political unity and all attempts so far to make Europe a political unity have been miserable or terrible. Europe consists of nations. Some are small, some are big, but almost all are rooted in more than thousand years of history, and we should rather accept that history than try to deny it or work against it. Accept that Europe is the Europe of the nations, and then accept NATO as Europe's most important source to security.

NATO is established to protect the independency of the nations. That is still its most important task.

EU can just like UN take care of many of the softer security tasks. That may be conciliation in conflicts, that may be help in disasters etc. But we have to remember that EU not necessarily is representative enough in all cases. Norway, Iceland and Switzerland are not included, and other nations have exceptions or reservations to some parts of the cooperation areas. It will probably stay like that. For example is it a worry in Denmark that the EU army will become a competitor to NATO. Some in EU has an aim that only the EU army may drive USA on the side. In my opinion we can not do that.

Besides, the discussion of a common security and foreign politics should be followed by a discussion of possible scenarios of threats. Where are actually the threats coming from in Europe today? Is it anybody that is threatening us at all? I think so, one may say that terrorism is one of the most serious threats. Another is the very large demographic changes, which in this moment change Europe radically, and I believe less in EU as the solution of the security problems, and more in NATO.

Vassiliou (Parl.-CY). - Mr President, we all feel very proud of the way the European Union has developed through the years and of its achievements. We also know that, after the next two waves of enlargement, the Union will embrace practically the whole continent, with a population of nearly 500 million and the largest GDP in the world. The power of the Union today, however, is essentially limited to the economic and social spheres and its effectiveness in world affairs is therefore limited. It resembles a one-legged giant, and we all understand how unstable such a one-legged creature can be. We therefore need to give this giant more strength and more stability in order to play a proactive role in world affairs.

622 It is about time that the Union was given the power to take concerted action in its external affairs on behalf of the Member States, taking into consideration the views and the interests of the Member States. As we all know, today we have a fragmentation of initiatives, decisions and actions taken by the European Union in its external affairs. We have two centres of gravity. This state of affairs cannot and should not be allowed to continue if we really want to push the Union to the forefront of the international scene. The two offices must merge, and this single office should form part of the Commission.

624 The idea that this Commissioner of External Affairs should be jointly chosen and agreed upon by the President of the Commission and the Heads of State and Government is a good one. After his or her confirmation by the European Parliament, the legitimacy of the office will be secured. We therefore hope that Member States will be prepared to adopt such a decision at the next

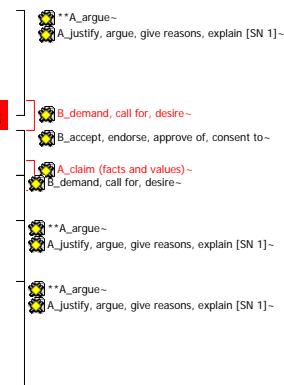

625
626 Intergovernmental Conference in 2004.

627
628 Nobody underestimates the sensitivities of the Member States in external affairs and nobody alleges that this will be an easy decision. It presupposes the political will of the Member States to move in this direction. We hope they will, realising that this is

629

631 You may say that, coming from a small applicant state, it is natural for me to take this view. This is true. It is also true, however, that no Commission of the European Union can be complete if it does not include a Commissioner for External Affairs vested with the powers that office needs to play a full role in today's world. For a common foreign policy to succeed, it must be backed by a common security and defence policy. Nevertheless, neither the time constraints nor this session's agenda

632 allow me to go into this aspect. <BRK>

633 Kristensen (Parl.-DK). - Hr. formand, det er helt afgørende, at vi satser på at udvikle EU's fælles udenrigspolitik. I dag er EU en progressiv kraft i kampen for en bæredygtig udvikling på globalt plan. Det skal EU også være i fremtiden. Det er EU, der har været førende, når vi har indgået internationale klimaaftaler. Det er EU, som forhåbentlig også, når det gælder en "global deal" i Sydafrika, skal være førende. Det har vi set mange eksempler på, at EU har både kunnet og villet.

634 Vi har besøg af de unge mennesker, og de arbejder herinde ved siden af. Det er min opfattelse, at netop EU's internationale rolle er noget, der optager de unge mennesker i Europa. De ønsker, at Europa skal gøre en forskel. Og vi står over for nye store udfordringer i de kommende år; fattigdom, etniske konflikter, menneskerettighedskrænkelser, menneskehandel, terrorisme osv er eksempler herpå. Her er det afgørende, at EU spiller en rolle, en rolle der gør, at det bliver en bedre verden. Skal vi gøre det, skal vi selvfølgelig samarbejde i EU, i FN og i NATO om at skabe løsninger, som kan være med til at klare internationale konflikter.

Jeg synes også, det ville være naturligt at diskutere, om EU kan have en mere fælles rolle at spille i en række sammenhænge, f.eks. i FN, i Sikkerhedsrådet, i G8-kredsene. Jeg hører mange kollegaer give udtryk for, at vi her må finde løsninger, så EU er i stand til at tale med en fælles stemme.

Som mange andre kollegaer har givet udtryk for, har det været en styrkelse, at vi fra 1999 fik Den Høje Repræsentant. Det har betydet, at EU's udenrigspolitik er blevet mere synlig og effektiv, men problemet er i dag, at vi langt hen ad vejen er enige om, at EU skal spille en aktiv rolle, men samtidig er der stor uklarhed om, hvem der gør hvad, hvor og hvornår? Alle de kollegaer, jeg har hørt indtil nu, har ønsket og givet udtryk for, at EU skal have en stemme i det internationale, at EU skal gøre en forskel. Jeg har undervejs og også i dag hørt repræsentanter for Europa-Parlamentet være prisværdigt præcise i deres ønske om at få en større indflydelse. Det er måske forståeligt nok.

Udenrigspolitik handler også om suverænitet. Og skal vores nye konstruktion være holdbar, så skal vi på en eller anden måde sikre, at vi får inddraget de nationale parlementer, ellers bliver det, der kommer ud af det, nemlig hverken samlet eller holdbart. <BRK>

Kristensen (Parl.-DK).

Mr. President, it is crucial to concentrate on developing the common foreign policy of EU. Today EU is a progressive power in the fight for a sustainable development on a global level. This is what EU should be also in the future. It is EU that has been leading when we have made international climatic agreements. It is hopefully also EU that will be leading when it comes to a "global deal" in South Africa. We have seen many examples on this, that EU both can and is willing to. We have a visit from the young people, and they work in here next to us. It is my opinion that exactly the international role of EU is something that engages young people in Europe. They want that Europe should make a difference. And we stand next to new great challenges the next years; poverty, ethnic conflicts, human right violations, trade with humans, terrorism etc are examples. Here it is crucial that EU plays a role, a role that makes the world better. If we should do that we should of course cooperate in EU, UN and NATO about making solutions that can clear international conflicts.

639 I also think it would be natural to discuss whether EU can have a more 640 joint role to play in several contexts, for example in UN, the Security 641 Council, in the G8-circle. I hear many colleagues express that we have 642 to find solutions here, so that EU is capable of speaking with one joint 643 voice. As many other colleagues have said, it has been a strengthening 644 that we from 1999 got the High Representative. That has made EU's foreign policy become more visible and efficient, but the problem today is that we have come far in agreeing upon that EU should play an active role, but at the same time is it unclear who makes what, where and when? All the colleagues I have heard so far have wished and expressed that EU should have one voice internationally, that EU should make a difference. I have during the time and also today heard representatives from the European Parliament being commendably accurate in their wishes on having a greater influence. That is maybe understandable. But Mr. President, I would like to end with a small warning. Foreign policy is also about sovereignty. And if our new construction should be good enough, we have to one way or another make sure that we get the national parliaments involved, if not what comes of it will neither be joint or sufficient.

Borrell Fontelles (Parl.-ES). - Señorías, a través de su política exterior cada Estado expresa una visión del mundo que es parte fundamental de su identidad. No descubro ningún Mediterráneo, pero hay que reconocer que los Estados europeos no han sido capaces de construir una visión común de sus intereses estratégicos, y por ello la política exterior de la Unión Europea se ha limitado a influir de forma marginal sobre la política de los Estados Unidos o a ser dependiente de ella.

Sin embargo, la política exterior y de seguridad común debe estar en el corazón de la Europa del futuro, y nuestra Convención así debe proponerlo en su texto constitucional. ¿Por qué? Porque frente a los nuevos desafíos globales la Unión está mejor situada que cada uno de sus Estados en solitario, y la gente lo sabe, y por eso los europeos piden una Europa de la seguridad y la defensa.

645 La política exterior de la Unión debe empezar, en mi opinión, por hacer de la Unión Europea un actor global capaz de regular la mundialización, de influir en el equilibrio Norte-Sur y de resolver los conflictos regionales a través de la defensa de los derechos de los pueblos. Al servicio de este objetivo hay que poner todos los instrumentos de la política exterior: el comercio, el desarrollo y la diplomacia. Y para ello hará falta combinar medidas estructurales y organizativas.

646 Entre las estructurales, la primera medida es, por supuesto, un mayor compromiso con la ayuda al desarrollo. No podemos, aunque quisiéramos, igualar la potencia militar estadounidense, pero podemos impulsar un ambicioso New Deal en favor del desarrollo sostenible y de una mundialización equitativa. La segunda es la apertura de los mercados europeos a las producciones agrícolas de los países en desarrollo.
Entre las organizativas, comunitarizar la participación de la Unión Europea en todas 648 las grandes negociaciones de regulación económica internacional, como ya hemos hecho con la política comercial exterior; unificar la representación de la Unión ante 649 las grandes organizaciones internacionales, empezando por el Fondo Monetario y el 650 Banco Mundial y acabando -¿por qué no?- con el Consejo de Seguridad de la ONU;
651 votar por mayoría cualificada todos los temas relativos a los derechos humanos para
652 definir nuestra posición ante el Tribunal de Ginebra; y un punto muy particular, hay que relanzar el partenariado euromediterráneo. Lo hicimos hace unos años, pero la realidad ha defraudado las expectativas levantadas. No habrá solución a los 653 problemas de emigración sin un fuerte compromiso con el desarrollo de África, ni seguridad posible para nuestros pueblos si no estabilizamos sus sociedades después del 11 de septiembre. Ello implica más apertura de los mercados agrícolas, gestión común de los flujos migratorios, apoyo a la inversión pública y acelerar de forma asimétrica la zona de libre cambio mediterránea.

654 Pero tampoco podemos contentarnos -y con esto acabo- con ser la Grecia de Washington. También tendremos que desarrollar un proyecto de defensa autónoma una vez que la funcionalidad y la legitimación de la OTAN se han transformado, 655 después del fin de la guerra fría y la ampliación al Este de la Unión Europea. <BRK>

Wittbrodt (Parl.-PL). - Mr President, playing the role of a key force in the global arena requires a strong external policy in terms of both economic and foreign and security policy. Europe must clearly respond to the challenge of the globalisation process. We do not want to be, as has already been mentioned here, an economic giant and a political dwarf. Therefore, reform of the common foreign policy and security area should follow the integration process within the First Pillar of the European Union, and move towards an ever-closer Union. I am convinced that when the European Union acts collectively on the global stage and speaks with one voice, the benefits will be much greater than we suppose. The Union should speak with one voice and, if possible, one face on the most important global questions.
In order to enhance external representation, the European Union should have a legal personality. The Community method should be applied to policy made under the current Second Pillar, with the exception of issues of European security and defence policy. All matters which relate to common foreign and security policy in the Council should be voted on using a qualified majority voting procedure, but maintaining the possibility of opt-out. The position of High Representative and a European Commissioner for External Relations should be unified in the European Commission. In order to increase legitimacy, the role of the European Parliament in formulating an assessment of the common foreign and security policy should be strengthened.

What is important, as was proved during the Kosovo and Yugoslavia crisis, is that Europe should have its own identity in defence and security policy and be efficient - not only in Petersberg tasks. Therefore, we should have a real operational capacity, including a military one. All the reforms should be undertaken whilst respecting and maintaining the role of Nato.

Finally, I would like to mention that from the point of view of the applicant countries, like Poland, we will be strong if we are in a strong and efficient Union.

659 Migas (Gouv.-SK). - Mr President, European integration based on historic reconciliation between the European nations and peoples has consolidated peace and stability in Western Europe. It is now exporting this stability. Enlargement is, 660 without any doubt, the biggest political step the Union will take in the near future. I am sure that this will increase Europe's potential to be a better place and will help 661 within the international framework in the governance and stabilisation of the 662 international system. This is why the European Union should work towards more cohesion and co-ordination in its external activities.

**A_argue~

In order to achieve greater cohesive action, the European Union must gradually get rid of its three pillar structure and replace it with one single structure.

**B_demand, call for, desire~
B_offer~

663 Secondly, the forces of globalisation are proving that questions of security need to be viewed comprehensively. Internal security cannot be clearly separated from external security. There is a connection between international crime and external trade policy, for example.

664 We support the use of qualified majority voting in matters pertaining to non-military crisis management. Enlargement to bring in more Member States may put more strain on the existing decision-making mechanisms. Even today, a number of policy tools relevant to the area of non-military crisis management fall within the First Pillar 665 of the European Union. The posts of High Representative and Commissioner for 666 External Relations should gradually be merged. This would be in addition to our aim 667 of simplifying the structure to make it more transparent and accountable. We are 668 ready and prepared to participate fully in the development of the ESDP.

**A_argue~
A_justify, argue, give reasons, explain [SN 1]

669 In this respect, it is important not to harm transatlantic relations. It should be in the European Union's interests to include the soon-to-be partners under a more encompassing umbrella of partnership. For applicants, the ESDP should have a definite Euro-Atlantic dimension. From our point of view, one of the preconditions 670 for active inclusion in the ESDP is Nato involvement and satisfactory agreement between the European Union and Nato on strategy, assets and capabilities and structures of consultation.

In helping to formulate a more comprehensive and multifaceted European Union eastern policy, my country, Slovakia, can add a new value to future specific initiatives. Its comparative advantage stems from common historical ties, geographic and linguistic proximity, as well as the shared experience of the post-Communist transition. The common foreign and security policy domain may become sensitive, with possible future implications for national sovereignty. This has not been an issue in my country so far. Solving the issue of legal personality would bring more clarity and legitimacy to the external actions of the European Union. <BRK>

Follini (Parl.-IT). - Signor Presidente, le relazioni internazionali sono il cuore del problema europeo e forse sono anche il cuore della soluzione che siamo chiamati a cercar di dare a quel problema. L'Unione è stata capace di mettere in comune la sua politica commerciale e di cooperazione allo sviluppo, ma non è stata altrettanto capace di allargare il campo della collaborazione all'argomento cruciale della sua proiezione internazionale. Ci siamo mossi in ordine sparso nelle aree di crisi, anche quelle che prendevano forma a ridosso dei nostri confini; abbiamo parlato con più voci, anche se quasi mai con voci dissonanti, e ancora oggi, se il dottor Kissinger cercasse di comporre il famoso numero telefonico dell'Europa, dovrebbe fare almeno quindici chiamate telefoniche, e domani ancora di più.

Ora, è evidente che in un mondo globalizzato il significato e il valore della nostra Unione consiste nel riuscire a parlare con una sola voce. La politica internazionale dell'Europa, e in essa la politica strategica di difesa, richiede per sua natura l'immediatezza di interventi, e richiede, per la sua efficacia, una fiduciosa cessione di competenze dagli Stati membri verso l'Unione. Questo è il campo dove la comunitarizzazione è più difficile perché lede abitudini e sovranità difficili da scalfire, ma dove la mezza comunitarizzazione sarebbe del tutto inutile, poiché non si può né spezzare in due la trama dell'azione internazionale né dividerne la responsabilità tra due teste. Non credo che un centauro o un ippogrifo farebbero più strada della tartaruga del Presidente Giscard d'Estaing.

670 Il superamento della regola dell'unanimità in questo campo appare doveroso, per quanto difficile. Ci può essere spazio perché chi non è d'accordo con la politica comune faccia valere il suo diritto all'obiezione, l'opting out, ma non c'è ragione perché chi è d'accordo non faccia valere la sua scelta di conferire all'Unione una più forte responsabilità di iniziativa.

- **A_argue~

671 Vorrei fare ancora due considerazioni a titolo di esempio. La prima: parlare con una sola voce, come in tanti abbiamo detto oggi, significa riportare ad unità ogni possibile dualismo tra Consiglio e Commissione. La presenza simultanea di un Alto rappresentante collocato presso il Consiglio e di un Commissario addetto alle 672 relazioni estere finisce, a lungo andare, com'è stato osservato da tanti questa sera, per 673 rendere meno credibili e incisivi l'uno e l'altro. La seconda: parlare con una sola voce 674 significa ricercare e coltivare con ottimismo, e anche con un certo grado di coraggio, 675 occasioni e situazioni nelle quali l'Europa si trovi ad avere un solo rappresentante
 676 piuttosto che due o quindici. Da questo punto di vista occorre modificare - ripeto 677 anch'io un argomento ricorrente - la personalità giuridica dell'Unione, ma occorre 678 soprattutto un forte atto di volontà politica che ci porti ad occupare un solo seggio, 679 quello europeo, nel Consiglio di sicurezza delle Nazioni Unite. Se riuscissimo a fare questo, il dottor Kissinger avrebbe trovato quel numero di telefono che da molti anni dice di stare cercando. <BRK>

Farnleitner (Ch.E/G.-AT). - Herr Präsident! Ich habe eine schöne Rede vorbereitet.
 Ich werde sie drucken und verteilen lassen und nur das sagen, was mich als Ihr Muntermacher zu so später noch Stunde bewegt!
 Erstens: Wenn es einen Code of Arms, ein Wappen der EU geben müsste, müsste der Wappenspruch lauten: learning by doing. Wir haben die letzten Jahrzehnte ohne Finalität im Vertrag unglaubliche Dinge zusammengebracht. Wir haben die Agrarpolitik nach Brüssel verlagert, von der 100% der Ernährung abhängt. Wir haben die Außenhandelspolitik nach Brüssel gebracht, von der ein Drittel der Arbeitsplätze abhängt. Wir haben den Euro nach Brüssel gebracht, an den nur 20% der Bürger glaubten. Und jetzt, wo wir bei der Außenpolitik sehen, dass 40% daran glauben, dass es sie geben muss, trauen wir uns nicht! Wäre es nicht Zeit, die Außenpolitiker zu bitten, einmal über ihren historischen Schatten zu springen? Sonst müssten wir in ihr coat of arms doing without learning hineinschreiben, was nicht schlecht wäre...

(Heiterkeit)

Ich bin sehr für einen schrittweisen Ansatz. Wir sollten die europäischen Bürger durch ein graduelles Vorgehen überzeugen. Ich schlage vor, eine Stimme im Weltwährungsfonds. Das würde übermorgen dazu führen, dass der Sitz des Weltwährungsfonds nach den Statuten nach Europa übersiedeln müsste. Das hätte den größten Werbeeffekt für die gemeinsame europäische Außenpolitik, den Sie sich vorstellen können! Wer die Bilder der letzten G7 und G8-Konferenzen gesehen hat, wie der Hohepriester Bush zelebriert und unsere Minister als Ministranten herumstehen, würde wahrscheinlich einen völlig anderen Eindruck haben! Ich glaube, dass wir durch graduellen Ansatz, durch einige konkrete gemeinsame außenpolitische Maßnahmen Europas Bürger rascher überzeugen könnten.
 Ich habe mir vorgestellt, dass es klug wäre, eine Stimme in Europa zu haben. Wir könnten einen Außenminister mit einem Sonderstatut bei der Kommission etablieren.
 Das wäre überhaupt kein Problem. Wir könnten auch bei dieser Gelegenheit deutlich Mehrheitsentscheidungen empfehlen, denn bei dem Rückhalt, von dem ich glaube, dass wir ihn bei den Bürgern haben, müsste das möglich sein.

Die Verteidigung wird wahrscheinlich der letzte Schritt sein, aber ich glaube wirklich, dass Europa als Europäer in allen Bereichen zu einem Europlayer werden sollte. Dies wäre die größte Publizitätsaktion, die wir für Europas Bürger und auch im eigenen Interesse setzen könnten.

690 Medalinskas (Parl.-LT). - Mr. President, the very first discussion about the mission of the European Union showed that the majority of us support the notion of a [redacted] stronger voice for Europe. Therefore we are now submitting our proposals on how to come up with this strong voice.

691 The final document will be produced by a working group. There are those that [redacted] support a stronger Europe, and those that support the notion of greater powers for the [redacted] Commission and the Council. Lithuania, as well as other candidate countries, has [redacted] certain links with the CFSP and it is only natural that our positions must be [redacted] coordinated somewhat. I understand that we will have an opportunity to participate 693 in these policies.

We also appreciate the fact that we are already able to participate in dialogue, which is extremely important. The implementation of our policies, especially those relating to Belarus, the Ukraine and other countries in the region, proves that we already have experience and can make a significant contribution to these kinds of policies. We [redacted]

694 We believe that a single voice should speak on European foreign policy.
695 On the other hand, I would like to say that the active policy participation of Lithuania [redacted]
696 in certain areas shows that those areas which are of the greatest interest to us are [redacted] 697 agreed upon by the Commission and the Council. There are also quite a few areas in [redacted] the world that call for the same position. EU presidencies, especially the last three, have shown that the foreign policy does not change with the changing of the [redacted] presidency. We support this because otherwise we would see different priorities relating to the differing interests of countries and regions.

698 We also believe that concrete proposals for making our foreign policy more effective 699 should now be put on the table. There are areas that do not need conflict-resolution [redacted] or crisis management. However, the Balkans, and the events of September 11, for [redacted] example, have shown that discussions on strong foreign policy should be continued.

We see Mr Solana acting to solve critical foreign policy issues. We also see the United Nations Secretary General's involvement in these international issues. We [redacted] believe, therefore, that it would be extremely good to have an arrangement, a [redacted] mechanism, that would ensure the coordination of our actions in order for Europe to [redacted] be able to speak with a single voice. Will this be possible? The answer will be the [redacted] result of all of our work here in this hall. I can only hope that the decision we make is a unified one, irrespective of differences. <BRK>

Hjelm-Wallén (Ch.E/G.-SE). – Herr ordförande! Efter fyra år som svensk [redacted] utrikesminister är jag starkt övertygad om att EU behöver en starkare gemensam [redacted] utrikespolitik. EU måste kunna tala med en tydligare röst. EU måste kunna agera mer [redacted] kraftfullt för fred, mänskliga rättigheter, fattigdomsbekämpning, fri handel osv., det [redacted] vill säga allt som är baserat på våra gemensamma värderingar.

Under de senaste åren har det faktiskt hänt en hel del vad gäller samordnad [redacted] utrikespolitik. Det har blivit bättre, eftersom det har funnits en politisk vilja hos [redacted] medlemsländerna, hos regeringarna och parlamenten att stärka EU:s utrikespolitik. [redacted] Jag vill understryka detta med politisk vilja, därför att utan den hjälper egentligen [redacted] inga institutionella förändringar. Det är naturligtvis angeläget att finna smidigare [redacted] beslutsformer. Jag anser att instrumentet gemensam strategi bör användas på ett [redacted] bättre sätt. Det ger nämligen också möjlighet att använda kvalificerad [redacted] majorietsomröstning för att genomföra politiken. För mig förblir dock [redacted] utrikespolitiken huvudsakligen mellanstatlig. Jag vill således inte flytta över de [redacted] utrikespolitiska frågorna till första pelaren.

Funktionen som hög representant, och kanske Javier Solana personligen, har betytt [redacted] mycket för en positiv utveckling. Jag tror också att beslutet i Sevilla att samla de [redacted] externa relationerna i ett särskilt råd kommer att förstärka utrikespolitiken. Det ger [redacted] dessutom bättre förutsättningar att ta breda utrikespolitiska grepp och ge EU en [redacted] större enhetlighet genom att hålla samman politiska områden, t.ex. handel och [redacted] bistånd, med den traditionella utrikespolitiken inklusive konfliktförebyggande och [redacted]

700 krishantering.

701 Vad gäller förslagen att slå samman funktionen hög representant och kommissionären för de externa relationerna vill jag hävda att om så skall ske bör den sammanslagna funktionen placeras hos rådet och inte i kommissionen.

702 Herr ordförande! Avslutningsvis vill jag påpeka att försvars politiken inte är en från utrikes- och säkerhetspolitiken separat företeelse. När presidiet nu talar om att sätta 703 upp en särskild arbetsgrupp för försvarsfrågor, anser jag därför att det är olämpligt.

704 Jag menar att försvars politiken måste utgöra en integrerad del i unionens utrikespolitik, med särskild inriktning på civil- och militär krishantering och konfliktförebyggande. Jag menar bestämt att försvars politiken handlar just om krishantering och inte om att ge unionen ett territoriellt försvar och ömsesidiga säkerhetsgarantier. <BRK>

Hjelm-Wallén (Ch.E/G.-SE). – Herr Vorsitzender! Nach vier Jahren als schwedischer Außenminister bin ich stark davon überzeugt, dass die EU eine stärkere gemeinsame Außenpolitik braucht. Die EU muss mit einer deutlicheren Stimme sprechen. Die EU muss kraftvoller eintreten können für Frieden, Menschenrechte, Armutsbekämpfung, 706 Freihandel usw., soll heißen, für alles, was auf unseren gemeinsamen Werten basiert.

In den letzten Jahren ist faktisch eine ganze Menge passiert, was die koordinierte Außenpolitik betrifft. Es ist besser geworden, weil es 708 einen politischen Willen bei den Mitgliedsländern, bei den Regierungen und den Parlamenten gibt, die Außenpolitik der EU zu stärken. Dies mit dem politischen Willen will ich unterstreichen, weil ohne diesen eigentlich keine institutionellen Veränderungen helfen. Es ist natürlich wichtig bessere Beschlussformen zu finden. Ich finde, das Instrument der offenen Koordinierung, sollte auf eine bessere Weise angewendet werden. Dies ermöglicht nämlich, die Wahl mit qualifizierter Mehrheit für die Durchführung von Politik anzuwenden.
Für mich verbleibt dennoch die Außenpolitik in der Hauptsache zwischenstaatlich. Ich möchte folglich die außenpolitischen Fragen nicht in die erste Säule verschieben.

709

Die Funktion des höchsten Repräsentanten, und vielleicht auch Javier Solana persönlich, bedeuteten viel für eine positive Entwicklung. Ich glaube auch, dass der Beschluss von Sevilla, die externen Beziehungen in einem speziellen Rat zu sammeln, die Außenpolitik verstärken wird.
Dies ergibt außerdem bessere Voraussetzungen, die Außenpolitik weiter zu fassen und gibt der EU eine größere Einheitlichkeit, in dem es verschiedene politische Bereiche vereint, zum Beispiel Handel und Entwicklung mit der traditionellen Außenpolitik inklusive der Konfliktprävention und dem Krisenmanagement.

Was den Vorschlag betrifft, die Funktion des höchsten Repräsentanten und des Kommissars für die auswärtigen Beziehungen zusammenzulegen, will ich geltend machen, dass, wenn es so geschehen soll, die vereinte Funktion beim Rat angesiedelt werden soll und nicht bei der Kommission.

die Verteidigungspolitik keine Erscheinung ist, die von der Außen- und Sicherheitspolitik getrennt ist. Wenn das Präsidium jetzt davon spricht, eine besondere Arbeitsgruppe für Verteidigungsfragen einzusetzen, betrachte ich dies folglich als unangemessen. Ich meine, dass die Verteidigungspolitik einen integrierten Teil der Außenpolitik der Union ausmachen muss, mit besonderer Ausrichtung auf ziviles und militärisches Krisenmanagement und Konfliktprävention. Ich sage nachdrücklich, dass Verteidigungspolitik genau von Krisenmanagement handelt und nicht davon, der Union eine territorielle Verteidigung und gegenseitige Sicherheitsgarantien zu geben.

Bösch (Parl.-AT). - Herr Präsident, meine Damen und Herren! Die Mitgliedstaaten der Europäischen Union arbeiten bis jetzt im Bereich der gemeinsamen Außen- und Sicherheitspolitik auf völkerrechtlicher Basis zusammen. Dies sollte nach meinem Dafürhalten auch so bleiben. Das scheint mir auch kein Widerspruch zu einer Effizienzsteigerung der gemeinsamen Außenpolitik in allen Bereichen, über die wir schon gesprochen haben. Da es sich dabei aber um einen Kernbereich der nationalen Souveränität handelt, brächte jedwede Erledigung durch einen supranationalen Rechtsetzer eine Marginalisierung der Staaten und eine Bevormundung in wesentlichen Bereichen mit sich. Wir werden doch nicht glauben, dass ein Mitgliedsland über längere Zeit hinweg entgegen seinen Interessen eine Position der Union im Außenwirkungsbereich wird mittragen können!

717
719

Eine Effizienzsteigerung der gemeinsamen Außenpolitik ist aber unabdingbar. Die Ziele der gemeinsamen Außen- und Sicherheitspolitik und der Europäischen Sicherheits- und Verteidigungspolitik sind deshalb klar zu definieren. Die demokratische Kontrolle - das wurde heute auch schon angesprochen - ist durch einen Ausschuss, in welchem auch die Parlamente der Mitgliedstaaten vertreten sind, sicherzustellen. Da die Sicherheit aller Mitgliedsländer und die der Union eng miteinander verbunden sind und die neuen sicherheitspolitischen Herausforderungen und Risiken durch internationale solidarische Zusammenarbeit zu bewältigen sind und allein dadurch, um also das Prinzip der europäischen Solidarität zu gewährleisten, kann das Gewicht der Union nach meinem Dafürhalten vergrößert werden, indem wir einen EU-Sicherheitsrat aus dem bereits bestehenden Rat für Allgemeine Angelegenheiten und Außenbeziehungen folgendermaßen einrichten: Der Europäische Sicherheitsrat - und hier gibt es ja auch schon Vorschläge von verschiedenster Seite - soll sich aus den Außen- und Verteidigungsministern unserer Mitgliedstaaten zusammensetzen, wobei am Prinzip der Einstimmigkeit in den wesentlichen Bereichen festzuhalten ist. Das Institut der konstruktiven Enthaltung ist akzeptabel, eine weitere Aufweichung ist jedoch zu vermeiden.

Jene außenpolitischen Agenten, die derzeit noch in einigen Kommissariaten residieren, sollten bei diesem Sicherheitsrat und dessen Generalsekretär hinkünftig gebündelt werden. Dieser Generalsekretär führt den Vorsitz in diesem Rat und hat für die Umsetzung der gesamten gefassten Beschlüsse Sorge zu tragen. Das würde meiner Auffassung nach die Außenwirkung hinkünftig erheblich verstärken. <BRK>

Yilmaz, Mesut (Gouv.-TR). - Mr. President, one of the fundamental tasks of this Convention is to define and develop the extent of the capabilities of the European Union. I think we all agree that the ability of the Union to project its values beyond its borders to meet the challenges of the 21st century, especially the challenges brought about by new threats such as international terrorism, the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and the alarming fault lines created within nations through the process of globalisation is very limited.

The credibility of the Union around the world is measured mainly by its economic 721 and financial assets. Certainly, the Union has been helpful in alleviating the plight of many nations, but this is only a damage control operation. We need to stop the political crisis, prevent humanitarian disasters and maintain peace and stability, especially in the regions close to the Union. For that, we need a positive and future-oriented agenda.

722 The Union cannot prosper or ensure its security by protecting its borders. We have to address the causes of new divisions and threats. This requires a more global and active policy on the part of the Union. This, in turn, calls for an effective foreign and security policy. In order to be credible, this policy must have legitimacy and broad public support within the Union. This requires more active involvement by the European Parliament and Member States' parliaments in relation to common foreign and security policies.

723 We also need a range of tools for the implementation of these policies. These should include changes in the representation of the Union in international fora, necessary adaptations to allow for a coherent Union voice and the elaboration of a strategic vision that will combine internal community policies with international objectives. A common European foreign and security policy can only be successful if it is inclusive, transparent and non-discriminatory. In this context, the European policies must not evolve to duplicate existing international and regional mechanisms, but must be complementary to such assets.

724 Transatlantic dialogue and cooperation must be maintained. The Union must also develop its particular policies in the light of its own experience, historical background and social consciousness. This is particularly relevant for regions that are feeling increasingly alienated from the West. With its specific tradition of social awareness and strong historical ties to different cultures, the Union can offer hope and inspiration to millions of people beyond the European continent. <BRK>

726 De Rossa (Parl.-IE). - Mr President, a good case has been made here today for the employment of a very efficient telephonist, someone who knows who to put you through to when you ring them and tell them your problem. The complexity we have in Europe today in relation to the common foreign and security policy reflects the reality that we do not have a fully federal Union. It reflects the fact that some States, the bigger States in particular, are not prepared to cede sovereignty in relation to taxation or economic governance to a democratic control.

727 But at the same time we are demanding that we all concede our sovereignty in relation to common foreign, security and defence policy. But that is an unrealistic position. I think the sooner we come to grips with that reality the better. I am in favour of a strong common foreign and security policy. I am in favour of a defence policy. I am not in favour of giving it over to an unaccountable body. It needs to be democratic. It needs to be accountable in the first instance, in my view, to the European Parliament. It needs to have some mechanism to ensure that it is accountable to the national parliaments.

728 There are real issues here. Fiddling around with instruments, fiddling around with bringing two people under one hat is not the solution. There is no institutional cure-all for the problems of the European Union in relation to a common foreign and security policy. There are real, fundamental issues here in relation to sovereignty and democracy and how we make the common foreign and security policy accountable as well as effective and efficient.

729 The second thing I want to say is that this Convention must ensure that we incorporate a strong statement of the values of this Union in relation to common foreign and security policy in the constitutional treaty. There is no way that the citizens of Europe will give over sovereignty willy-nilly in relation to this issue, unless they know the context and the principles according to which these powers are going to be conceded to a European body. I think it would be hard to find a better expression of those principles and values than in the European Charter of Fundamental Rights which was constructed by a Convention representative of the whole of the Union. That needs to be taken into account in tandem with the Laeken Declaration which made it clear that what we were about was applying a moral framework to globalisation, ensuring solidarity was built into the way in which we

731 conduct our foreign policy. <BRK>

Balázs (Gouv.-HU). - Mr President, in the new century we often ask the question: "What is external at all?" This morning, when discussing the reform of the Council, somebody asked the question: "is the action inside the EU external or internal?" In trade it is much easier because statistics distinguish internal and external trade. The Seville Summit made great progress in trying to separate internal and real external issues on the agenda of the General Affairs Council. However, most areas that remain the responsibility of the foreign ministries in the Member States are considered possible elements of the external action of the European Union.

Mr President, the EU's external action could and should not be identical to what is considered and classified as foreign policy in the Member States. Expanding upon a Member State's foreign policy will give us the ideal scope and content of the EU's external action. I could speak about this problem at length, but there is no time. I would like to conclude by mentioning two positive cases of EU external action.

One is an achievement, the other a challenge or an opportunity.

The achievements of the external action are the strategies. We have an excellent paper from the Secretariat of the Convention with a lot of institutional and legal ideas. Concrete cases merely illustrate the issues, but I think that we should highlight the importance of strategies. Three of them have been accepted recently, concerning the Mediterranean, Russia and Ukraine. The EU was able to fuse different instruments in the framework of such strategies, and they are decided upon unanimously and are binding on Member States. The common point of all three strategies is that they are dealing with neighbours. Why not try to go on and develop them further? The challenge and opportunity lies in the fact that the EU will get ten more Member States which will change its role and place in international organisations. Why not try to improve the EU's role and strengthen its legal personality and competences in international organisations? <BRK>

Oleksy (Parl.-PL). - Mr President, everybody agrees that European Union enlargement and the consolidation of its position in the international arena is one of the most difficult challenges the European Union faces at the beginning of the 21st century. An enlarged Union which is politically stable and economically strong has a much better chance of gaining a position in the international arena that corresponds to its aspirations and economic and population potential.

The European Union has, in recent years, made significant progress in the area of the common foreign and security policy. Is that progress sufficient, however, to face the new threats and challenges of a globalised world? My answer is no. In order to build a coherent and effective foreign policy, the structures and the instruments at the Union's disposal need to be improved. An increase in the coordination of Member States' foreign policies seems to be needed.

A common framework for such coordination will, in turn, have to consider bringing the functions of the External Relations Commissioner and the High Representative closer. Improving the synergy of what the Commission and the Council do in external relations should primarily be based on drafting joint action and common projects. Such an approach should proceed gradually, through evolution.

The role of the Council in shaping foreign policy needs to include a clearer distinction between the areas of Council activity and its co-ordinating functions in general affairs. In that context, the Seville Summit decisions are the first step in the right direction. This right direction, in my opinion, is also to create more Community areas in the field of common foreign and security policy.

Poland's ambition is to strengthen and more precisely define the Union's external role. This concerns, most of all, its eastern dimension. We want to become a bridge between the Union and its future eastern neighbours, sharing with them our experience and know-how from the transitional period. We should also make the Union's eastern policy more open-minded and constructive. I believe that our experience, the level of our development and the infrastructure of economic and the development of the EU's eastern policy.

747 To conclude, I wish to stress that as the Union is being reformed, its common foreign 748 and security policy must definitely be strengthened. The Union's position and its 749 international initiatives must be more than the sum of the positions of individual 750 Member States. The world needs a new European presence. <BRK>

752 Carnero González (PE). - Señor Presidente, si le preguntamos a la gente su opinión en torno a si la Unión Europea tiene que hacer más política exterior, seguramente, la respuesta será afirmativa. Pero estaríamos haciendo una pregunta incompleta, porque me da la impresión de que la ciudadanía quiere que hagamos más política exterior, de otra manera y con objetivos distintos a los que clásicamente se han entendido.

753 La gente que responde en las encuestas o se manifiesta ante cada cumbre, incluso los que hace dos días tomaron el stand de la Unión Europea en la Cumbre del Sida de Barcelona, exigiendo que cumplamos los compromisos, que haya dinero de la Unión 754 para combatir esa plaga, nos piden que intervengamos, por ejemplo, en la globalización para democratizarla y para socializarla, que contribuyamos a construir un nuevo orden internacional justo y democrático, no cualquier orden, que también hagamos lo nuestro para proteger el medio ambiente. Y se indignan, con razón, 755 cuando ven, por ejemplo, que la Unión adopta compromisos de incremento de ayuda oficial al desarrollo que están verdaderamente en límites ridículos para los problemas que se quieren afrontar.

756 Por lo tanto, tenemos el apoyo ciudadano. Y si tenemos el apoyo ciudadano para ir 757 más allá y actuar de otra manera, nos tenemos que preguntar cómo podemos hacerlo.
758 Creo yo que la carga de la prueba, en este caso, no está en el método comunitario 759 sino que está en la intergubernamentalidad.

760 Lo que ha fracasado hasta la fecha es la unanimidad; lo que ha fracasado hasta la fecha es recordar que el tema "política exterior" es de soberanía de los Estados y casi intocable. ¿Pero la moneda única no es también de soberanía de los Estados? Y está en el bolsillo de los ciudadanos. ¿No tenemos un euro? ¿No han desaparecido las monedas de muchos Estados miembros hasta la fecha? Lo mismo podría suceder con la política exterior.

761 Por eso yo creo que la introducción del método comunitario significa cosas muy sencillas. Adoptar decisiones por mayoría, ciertamente. Que la Comisión tenga su iniciativa. Que el Parlamento pueda controlar y no sólo controlar, que, por ejemplo, el Parlamento pueda dar su dictamen sobre el nombramiento de Mister PESC. Que éste esté en la Comisión, o que sea propuesto por el Consejo y por la Comisión conjuntamente eso es lo de menos. También que el Parlamento Europeo pueda pronunciarse sobre todos los acuerdos políticos internacionales, incluidos los comerciales, o que realmente pueda usar los medios precisos para que la cláusula democrática se active cuando se violen los derechos humanos.

762 La gente quiere una política exterior integral: diplomática, política, económica, comercial, de desarrollo. Y, por supuesto, que tenga como instrumento una defensa nueva, no una defensa clásica, basada en un nuevo concepto de seguridad humana.
Para eso una Unión con personalidad jurídica, desde luego, estaría a la altura de lo que pide la gente. <BRK>

sujets qui nous occupent aujourd'hui, en réponse à l'excellent document du 764 Je vais me borner à quelques remarques liminaires. Tout d'abord, la France, et cela va de soi, est attachée à une Europe politique forte, qui soit un véritable acteur sur la scène internationale, à la hauteur de son poids économique et commercial, et au service des valeurs qui fondent nos sociétés. L'évolution récente et considérable en la politiques que lui confère son statut de première puissance commerciale et de premier fournisseur d'aides publiques au développement. En effet, l'Union a su récemment assumer de nouvelles responsabilités, lesquelles correspondent à des convergences croissantes d'intérêt. La création par le traité d'Amsterdam du Haut représentant a été un élément tout à fait déterminant de la montée en puissance de la politique extérieure et de sécurité commune de l'Union. Sans oublier le travail accompli par Javier Solana dans les Balkans ou au Proche-Orient, appuyé par notre unité politique, qui a permis de renforcer notre visibilité, notre présence au monde. Cela dit, il va de soi également que nous devons réfléchir aujourd'hui à la façon d'aller plus loin pour que l'Union remplisse pleinement son rôle. Les quatre questions recensées dans la note du Secrétariat sont, à cet égard, d'une très grande pertinence. À quinze, et demain à vingt-sept, l'action extérieure de l'Union doit s'inscrire dans le cadre d'une véritable diplomatie animée par une volonté politique. Cette diplomatie doit reposer sur trois points. En premier lieu, sur la visibilité et la continuité de nos engagements, ce qui suppose une certaine permanence du leadership et une capacité à définir une stratégie européenne globale. Ensuite, sur la cohérence de l'ensemble de nos politiques, notamment celle des moyens financiers, des actions de coopération, des moyens humanitaires et des capacités militaires, ce avec des objectifs politiques définis. Cela pose la question de l'aménagement de la structure en piliers. Enfin, sur la légitimité et la crédibilité de nos positions, ce qui implique un système institutionnel responsable, suffisamment souple pour permettre de tirer profit des situations géographiques et des contextes historiques nationaux, tout en maintenant - et c'est très important - l'égalité entre les États.

La nature de cette action diplomatique et de sécurité doit nous conduire à dépasser - et c'est ce que nous faisons aujourd'hui, me semble-t-il - le débat sur l'idée de communauté autorisation pure et simple du deuxième pilier. Nous devons d'abord nous poser des questions concrètes: comment favoriser la définition d'intérêt européen, qui doit prendre l'initiative, quelles doivent être les procédures de décision, comment doivent être exécutées les décisions en matière de relations extérieures.

Quant à la question de la nomination d'une seule personne qui occuperait les fonctions de Haut représentant et de commissaire aux relations extérieures, elle doit être étudiée soigneusement et, sur ce point, je partage l'avis de M. Michel Barnier: il doit y être procédé de façon non idéologique, pragmatique, en ayant toutefois à l'esprit toutes les conséquences institutionnelles de ce choix, et elles sont importantes, sur le rôle respectif du Conseil et de la Commission. <BRK>

Ich stimme dem, was die Herren Brok, Glotz, Lamassoure, Meyer, Borrell und Farnleitner gesagt haben, voll inhaltlich zu. Ich denke, wenn die Europäische Union tatsächlich auf dem Weg zu einer politischen Union ist, dann macht es auch keinen Sinn, dass wir uns darum kümmern, dass sich künftig immer noch 15 oder dann 27 Einzelstaaten selbst verteidigen können, sondern dann müssen wir darüber nachdenken, dass auch diese Union sich verteidigen kann, weil sie auch nur dann ein Partner im Gespräch mit den USA wird sein können.

Firstly, we must identify our major priorities. If we have too many priorities none of them will get done. The first task is to have clear priorities.

Secondly, I would like to join the long list of speakers who proposed merging the position of the Commissioner for External Relations and the High Representative, to avoid any duplication, any rivalry. We have to bridge the gap between the supranational and the intergovernmental side of the foreign policy of the European Union.

<sup>776</sup> My last point is that we need to remedy the shortcomings of the slow decision-making procedure. I am sure that there are options in place in the Union. We have to use them. One of the options is qualified majority voting. Another option is constructive abstention and the third enhanced co-operation. Using them, we can have a credible, a stronger and viable foreign policy. As far as I see, that was the major conclusion of that vital debate today: most of the speakers would like to have a real, credible foreign policy.
